Serial Number	Date of Serial	DELETION (S)
3066	12/19/74	(b) (7) (C) - Deletions were made on this page to withhold the name of a Special Agent, inasmuch as the release of this name would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy.
3067	12/20/74	(b) (1) - Pages 2 and 3 of this serial have been classified pursuant to Executive Order 11652 on 12/2/77 and it bears the Classification Officer's number 2040. (b) (7) (C) - On the first page of this serial under the dissemination, the names of third parties were withheld to the extent that the release of this information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. In addition, on this first page under the block "received by" the name of a Special Agent of the FBI was withheld inasmuch as the release of this name would constitute an unwarranted invasion of personal privacy. The name of a Special Agent was also deleted in the block stamp in the lower right hand corner. (b) (7) (D) - All other deletions on page 1 of this serial were made pursuant to this exemption, inasmuch as the release of this information would identify a source for which an expressed or implied promise of confidentiality has been given. To release this information would also compromise the further effectiveness of this source.
3068	1/28/75	(b) (7) (C) - Deletions were made on this serial to withhold the names of FBI employees inasmuch as the release of these names would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy.
3069	2/4/75	No deletions were made.
3070	2/14/75	(b) (7) (C) - Deletions were made on the original of this document to withhold the name of a Special Agent, inasmuch as the release of this name would constitute an unwarranted invasion of Privacy.

Serial Number	Date of Serial	DELETION (S)
3071	2/28/75	(b) (1) - The text on pages 2 and 4 and page 3 entirely of both the "type out copy" and "transmit copy" of this serial have been classified pursuant to Executive Order 11652 on 11/21/77, and it bears the Classification Officers' numbers 2040 and 3137. (b) (7) (C) - Deletions were made at the bottom of page 1 of the "type out copy" to withhold the names of Special Agents inasmuch as the release of this information would constitute an unwarranted invasion of privacy.
3072	2/28/75	No deletions were made. (Please be advised that although this information was not released in 3071 the material is paraphrased in such a way so as to allow disclosure.)

TO : SAC (65-15348)

FROM : SA [REDACTED] (38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESP-R

DATE: JAN 28 1975

On 1/28/75, Mr. MARTIN WISHNEW, Secy to newly appointed Chief Assitant AUSA, Mr. CAHILL, SDNY, advised the writer as follows:

The exhibits from NYO files, which were personal property of the ROSENBERGS, together with items which were previously turned over by the FBI to the US Marshall's office, have been gathered together and are now in possession of Mr. CAHILL.

The above items are to be returned by the USA, SDNY, to the sons of the ROSENBERGS.

Prior to actually turning this material over to the ROSENBERGS, Mr. WISHNEW requested that the NYO furnish a photographer to take colored photos of this material for the benefit of the NYO and the USA's office.

This matter was discussed with SA [REDACTED] acting SAC, and it was decided there would be no objection to this.

The Photo Lab is requested to furnish a photographer for this purpose.

Mr. WISHNEW is located in office of Mr. CAHILL, Room 401, US Court House, Foley Square, telephone number 791-0063.

ReNYairtel to Bureau, 10/30/74.

On 1/28/75, Mr. MARTIN WISHNEW, Secretary to Chief Assistant AUSA CAHILL, SDNY, NYC, advised that prior to returning certain personal items to the ROSENBERG family, which had formerly been in possession of the FBI or the USA, it was desired that these items be photographed for record purposes.

The items involved have been photographed by the NYO and seven negatives are enclosed herewith for the Bureau.

Request of the Bureau

It is requested that the Mechanical Section prepare three 8" by 10" color prints of each negative.

One of each print will be maintained in the NYO file and two prints of each will be furnished to the USA, SDNY per his request.

Enclosed herewith are two copies of the letter furnished to the NYO by Chief Assistant USA THOMAS J. CAHILL, SDNY, on 2/26/75. As set forth in referenced communication, Mr. CAHILL stated that he is going to attempt to counteract the request in this particular matter as to the Freedom of Information Act as amended by pointing out that ANATOLI A. YAKOVLEV is still a fugitive from justice and the subject of an indictment and bench warrant in the SDNY.

FBIHQ will be kept promptly advised of all details concerning this matter.

Chief Assistant USA, SDNY THOMAS J. CAHILL contacted the NYO on 3/31/75 and advised as follows:

He is answering the request for information by the Rosenberg Attorneys with a denial. However, he has been advised by MARSHALL PERLIN, attorney for the ROSENBERGS, that in the event he doesn't get what he wants he is prepared to go to court to get it. CAHILL anticipates he will have to appear in court representing the Government, and at this point is not aware of what is possibly being done by the Department or the Bureau on the overall question of what material if any might be turned over from the files.

CAHILL indicated that he has not received any instructions from the Department in regard to the handling of this matter. In addition, he is faced with the fact that he has no AUSA on his staff who is at all familiar with this case. He stated that he is now appointing an AUSA to start familiarizing himself with the case, but that this will take a period of time.

CAHILL expressed concern over the fact that he may soon find himself standing in USDC to answer a complaint by the defense, and he would like to be in a position to tell the USDJ that the Department and the Bureau have men who are working on the problem of determining what material, if any, can be made available. He stated that at this point he assumed that the Department and FBIHQ are working on this matter, but he does not know this officially.

OPENING THE FBI FILES:

AN INTERIM REPORT

Smith Alumnae Quarterly February 1975

ALLEN WEINSTEIN, associate professor of history and director, American Studies Program

Encountering government agencies in the course of scholarly research is far more common among political scientists and sociologists than among historians. My own published writings until recently involved no such contacts, dealing instead with such unpublic subjects as nineteenth century monetary politics, antebellum slavery and reform psychology. Several years ago, however, I began work on a study of the Cold War's impact upon American society during the so-called "McCarthy era" or what I prefer to call "the second red scare." My research involved a reassessment of major internal security controversies of 1940s and 1950s including the Hiss and Rosenberg cases. After publishing several articles on these and similar cases of alleged Cold War subversion, I concluded any clear understanding of them required close scrutiny of the relevant FBI and Justice Department files. I initiated suit against both agencies in November 1972 to secure the Hiss files, assisted by the American Civil Liberties Union, and in September 1973, FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley granted me access to this material. I had requested access to the Rosenberg files the previous month, and Kelley agreed to provide these as well. The FBI Director acted unwillingly and only in response to a new policy initiated the previous month by then-Attorney General Elliot Richardson which liberalized release to scholars of both Justice Department and FBI records more than fifteen years old.

Within a matter of months, the Justice Department had released thousands of pages from its files on both cases without making any deletions, although at an inflated cost for "processing" and xeroxing of approximately $2,500. To date, however, I have not received a single page of the FBI's 25,000 page Rosenberg dossier and only 275 heavily-censored pages of its 53,000 page file on the Alger Hiss case. At this rate, I calculated that it would take the Bureau over 400 years to deliver its remaining records on the two cases, which runs a bit beyond my publisher's deadline. Even the small amount of material released by the FBI thus far was so thoroughly butchered in the censoring process that much of it would be far more helpful to amateur cryptographers than to professional historians. The FBI's long delays in complying with both the Richardson order and Kelley's own promise to release the files, as well as the unnecessary deletions it makes, reflect the Bureau's traditional indifference to its nominal overseers at the Justice Department, which rarely tried to supervise the agency closely during J. Edgar Hoover's half-century as Director. Elliot Richardson's strenuous efforts to limit such virtual autonomy at the FBI ended abruptly with his resignation during the "Saturday Night Massacre," and the Bureau has managed to insulate itself again from effective Justice Department control under his successors as Attorney General.

My own case was not unusual. During the past year, despite pressures from the Justice Department, scholars studying subjects a half-century old have also been refused access to Bureau files: files on the Red Scare of 1919-1920, the government's raids on the IWW (the "Wobblies") during the First World War, Harding's Attorney General, Harry Daugherty, and similarly dangerous topics still remain closed to researchers. Because of the FBI's failure to comply with Justice Department regulations and its own promises in connection with my requests, I have renewed my lawsuit under the Freedom of Information Act. Congress strengthened that measure significantly with a series of amendments passed in November 1974 over President Ford's veto.

Hoover's ghost still haunts the Bureau's personnel and practices, and a vaguely-Orwellian quality has characterized my experiences over the past year with the FBI. When agents promised "cooperation" in releasing the files, they actually meant "non-cooperation." When they agreed after pressure from a federal judge to "expedite" the processing of this material in reality (as I later learned) they stopped processing entirely. The indifferent officials of a weakened Justice Department offered no tangible help in ending the Bureau's evasiveness, and within a few weeks, both the new Attorney General and FBI Director Kelley will have to explain this behavior in federal court where, in recent months, "stonewalling" has not proved an effective substitute for prompt compliance with the law.

When the SMITH ALUMNAE QUARTERLY asked me for a brief article on my experiences, I thought that a glimpse at some entries from my journal might offer more insight into the problems than an elaborate recapitulation of this story's well-publicized facts.

Mr. Weinstein has received an American Council of Learned Societies Fellowship and the Harry S. Truman Library Institute's yearly Tom E. Evans Award to assist him in his research while he will be on sabbatical during the second semester and on a leave of absence from the College during the first semester of the year 1975-76. Throughout the year Mr. Weinstein will commute between Smith and Cambridge, where he will be a Visiting Scholar at the Harvard Law School. He hopes to revise his general study of society and the Cold War, The Second Red Scare, and to complete his study of the Julius and Ethel Rosenberg and Alger Hiss cases.

Three pages of FBI files as released to the author

But Gold and the Greenglasses later testified to the contents of these interviews not only in open court but earlier conviction is witnessed before the McCarthy committee. Also, the FBI has previously given out its files on the Rosenbergs and Hiss cases to friendly writers such as Don Whitehead (The FBI Story) and Frederick Collins (The FBI in Peace and War) as well as to public officials such as Nixon and McCarthy. Hoover was a veritable Johnny Appleseed with allegedly secret files, scattering them around Washington whenever it suited his purposes. McCreight was polite but adamant: no processing would take place until the Bureau received "privacy" guidelines from Justice. (Author's note: These "guidelines" were never formulated.) McCreight also said that the Greenglass interviews particularly would never be released, since the couple (now living under an assumed name since his release from prison) have objected strenuously.

NOVEMBER 24. The past weeks have produced intense publicity on the story since the New York Times reported earlier this month: "FBI TO OPEN SECRET FILES, WITH SOME DELETIONS, ON HISS, CHAMBERS, AND THE ROSENBERGS." Because of Watergate, most newspaper reporters and radio-TV interviewers are looking for an anti-Nixon slant in connection with my research on the Hiss case. Most often asked questions: "Was Hiss framed and did Nixon have a hand in it?" "Were the Rosenbergs framed by the FBI?" Newspeople seem to think that the "answers" to these questions will be self-evident from a cursory examination of the FBI files; I remain skeptical. Although friendly towards me, the press wants at least an ounce of flesh at this point. Phone call yesterday from a producer of a nationally-broadcast interview show asking me to appear next Sunday if I had something incriminating to say about Nixon. Amazing!

DECEMBER 3. The nut mail has begun arriving. Several phone calls last week from "conspiracy theorists," who view my efforts as an opening wedge toward vindicating Oswald, Sirhan, Arthur Bremer, James Earl Ray and probably even Guitreau (Author's note: Garfield's assassin). Also, I received some far rightwing cards and letters, postmarked locally and unsigned. Several simply have stickers reading "COMMUNISM IS JEWISH," "HITLER WAS RIGHT," etc. My favorite begins: "You do not need FBI files on Hiss to write a book on cold war for every war including cold war the US fought was promoted to further the British Israelite plot for world control under the British Empire which is controlled by Pharisee Jews and the House of Rothschild."

JANUARY 3, 1974. Still no files, despite several frustrating months of doubletalk from the FBI. The Justice Department began releasing its materials last month including a previously-classified one-hundred page report on the Rosenberg case which quotes secret FBI files. Decided to try and present my problems to the incoming Attorney General, who agreed to see me in his Senate office today. This was Saxbe's last day in the Senate and, as I arrived, his staff feverishly packed files and office furnishings for transfer to the Justice Department.

Saxbe - smiling, friendly, almost cherubic - ushered me into a private office overflowing with packing crates covering the floor and all the chairs. One file open on his desk - with my name on it. We paced back and forth across the room as we talked, mainly for lack of a place to sit. I described the previous months' difficulties in securing FBI compliance, contrasted this with Justice's cooperation, and he appeared sympathetic. He spoke bluntly about the difficulties confronted by Kelley with holdover Hoover agents - "some of those types think they're still living in the nineteenth century," he noted, and "have to be dragged kicking and screaming into the 1970s." Interrupted by a call from former A. G. Richard Kleindienst. Saxbe talked about selecting a chauffeur and a Deputy A. G., most of the conversation being about the chauffeur. Before I left, Saxbe told me that someone at the FBI told him that I was trying to locate the Greenglasses in order to harass them. He seemed surprised at my assurance that this was a lie but apparently agreed with me that anything the Greenglasses told the Bureau 24 years ago could now be safely revealed to historians. He made no promises but assured me of his personal interest.

JANUARY 20, 1974. Fourth trip to Washington this month. I'm becoming a fixture at FBI headquarters. Perhaps soon I'll be included in the tour. The agents complain of growing pressure from Saxbe and from the U.S. Attorney in the District of Columbia (who is taking heat from a federal judge anxious to settle my case) to turn over some files. One major difficulty, an agent insisted, was that "some KGB man in this country might request our records." I agreed that this might prove embarrassing but suggested that the FBI might be skillful enough to distinguish between garden variety American historians and KGB operatives. Another time, at Farrington's request (Farrington is the agent in charge), I provided a detailed list of specific reports that I wanted immediately, a list drawn from reports mentioned in Justice Department files. (In April 1974, I was informed by Agent McCreight that various Rosenberg files that I had requested were either "missing or lost," although they might even "be out to some supervisor or agent.") On another visit this month, McCreight assured me that I "would be getting a good cross-section of FBI documents - more than enough for (my) research." I thanked him but pointed out that my research would require the complete file on both cases. Shades of Attorney St. Clair and his client!

JANUARY 23. Today, Dennis handed over the first FBI file, heavily-blue pencilled seventeen page report. I asked about charges - originally the FBI had requested a 25% deposit on estimated total costs of approximately $18,000 for both the Hiss and Rosenberg files. Much as Knopf (my publisher) wants to help, that figure would be ridiculously steep. Now, Farrington and Dennis asked me for $50 for the seventeen page file. (This seemed generous until I calculated in the hotel later that at this rate [$50 for each 17 pages], I would eventually pay $155,000 for the Hiss file and $74,100 for the Rosenberg records. Justice Department costs have been steep but still far less prohibitive.) When I began describing the more reasonable payment procedures at the Justice Department. I don't care how they handle things. They do things their way, and we do things our way. They don't tell us how to handle our affairs, and we don't tell them. And another thing, when you have any questions about our work, don't call the Justice Department! Call us! We handle our own policy, not them. They don't tell us what to do!" Farrington, of course, is depressingly correct. . . .

Although the preceding excerpts suggest the quality of my own encounters with the FBI over the past sixteen months, they distort or neglect several equally important factors in the overall story. First, the FBI has not succeeded in impeding my research. Quite the contrary. For one thing Justice Department records have yielded extremely important source material on the FBI investigations that accompanied preparations for the Hiss and Rosenberg trials. For another, the publicity that has accompanied my efforts to secure the Bureau's files has alerted a number of individuals with important information on both cases to my presence. These private sources have shed new light on the cases through interviews and documents, information that in many instances, is almost certainly not in the FBI files. The interviewing process continues along with a careful scanning of materials in such archives as the Truman Library and the Library of Congress. These sources, along with the printed primary records and previous studies, form the inevitable basis of my own work. Only genuinely gullible individuals or partisans truly believe that some "smoking gun" will emerge from the FBI files, some single piece of evidence that will "prove" their specific theory of either case. There are no shortcuts to the writing of serious history — even with FBI files — that exempt a scholar from doing his homework.

Even at this point, however, the FBI and Justice Department files have provided new insights into the two cases. Documents in my possession show, for example, that the FBI (despite denials at the time) were inspecting actual Woodstock typewriters as early as December 1948 prior to the time Hiss's defense staff found another Woodstock on which Hiss allegedly typed stolen government documents (this does not prove, of course, that the FBI "forged" the Hiss Woodstock as the latter's defenders have claimed); that prosecutors in the Rosenberg case originally opposed asking for the death penalty but were overruled by Truman Administration officials in Washington; that the House Committee on the American Activities withheld the microfilmed "pumpkin papers" from Justice Department prosecutors until shortly before Hiss's first trial; and that David Greenglass — the Rosenbergs' chief accuser — confessed to FBI agents in March 1953, months before the couple were executed, that he had stolen a piece of uranium from Los Alamos, a charge leveled by the Rosenberg defense lawyers during the trial. (Neither the FBI nor the Justice Department, which was informed of Greenglass's confession by the Bureau, reported this critical admission at the time, despite the fact that it might have proved decisive in the Rosenbergs' last-ditch appeal for a stay of execution.)

Finally, I must confess to a certain anxiety about the merits of releasing some raw data contained in FBI files to any researcher, myself included. The current professed concern for privacy is not genuine, however, and stems primarily from its inability to use "national security" any longer as an argument against releasing files a quarter century old. The FBI thought nothing of cooperating not only with law enforcement agencies but with employers, credit bureaus and friendly journalists in the past whenever it wished to violate someone's privacy through distributing files. Still, the issue remains a serious one; secrecy's wrongs should not obviate privacy's rights. Far more thought should be devoted to establishing a fair and impartial mechanism for mediating between a healthy respect for individual privacy and an equally sober concern for releasing historically important material contained in previous era's FBI files.

On my first visit to the Bureau's headquarters in October 1973, I pointed out to the agents in Farrington's office that the FBI had been placed in a unique position after Hoover's death. As long as he continued to run the agency, the Bureau never really possessed a historical "past," since even scholarly scrutiny of events as distant as the World War I radical raids or the 1919-1920 Red Scare involved episodes in which Hoover himself had participated. In that sense, they remained "current" events in the mind of the Director, who used every available means to identify his own place in history with that of the Bureau. But the FBI can regain public respect in the future, respect tarnished by some of its activities under Hoover and L. Patrick Gray, only if it begins confronting candidly the complete history of its first half-century, mistakes as well as triumphs. Director Kelley began this process by acknowledging that the Bureau can make mistakes, something Hoover was loath to admit.

Now that many of the FBI's agents have retired and begun thinking about their own place in history, moreover, it becomes more difficult to suppress successfully any activity in which the Bureau took part during the Hoover era (witness the involvement of a half dozen former agents on public television's recent documentary on the Rosenberg case, all of them talking freely about their experiences). Any effort to cover up the Bureau's previous mistakes can only injure its chances for future credibility. Perhaps the time has come for a joint committee of FBI officials, historians, and archivists to assume responsibility for the administration of the Bureau's records removing files more than fifteen years old under appropriate safeguards to the National Archives, if only to preclude such material being "lost," burned (as L. Patrick Gray had done) or otherwise misplaced. Only closer supervision by the Justice Department and by Congress will achieve this result, of course, but perhaps the moment for such scrutiny has arrived. My own experiences confirm, in a small way, the need for such changes. I think often these days about the remark made last year by a Washington reporter who expressed skepticism that I would ever receive the Hiss and Rosenberg files. "Even if those people haven't a thing to hide," he observed, "they will imagine that they do. Then, rather than 'embarrass the Bureau,' they will violate Justice Department rules and hang on desperately to the documents." For the moment, they have done just that.

NEW YORK COUNTY COURT HOUSE
NEW YORK, N.Y. 10007

March 13, 1975

Hon. Clarence M. Kelley
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Washington, D. C. 20535

Dear Mr. Kelley:

My daughter Barbara, now Mrs. Elliot Blinderman of Beverly Hills, California, an alumna of Smith College, Class of 1957, has sent me the enclosed photocopy of an article in the "Smith Alumnae Quarterly", February 1975 by Professor Alan Weinstein, entitled "Opening the FBI Files: An Interim Report". I direct your attention to the last page which she encircled with her comment "I thought you didn't ask for the death penalty. Is this error?"

I've enlightened her. Her question, as you can see, arises from Professor Weinstein's statement that FBI and Justice Department files have provided new insights * * *; "that prosecutors in the Rosenberg case originally opposed asking for the death penalty but were overruled by Truman Administration officials in Washington." I don't know the basis for this statement nor do I know what records he speaks about. I do know the facts. The Professor is all wrong and he fabricates.

Preliminarily, when I had the honor of President Truman's appointment as United States Attorney, the prevailing sentencing practice in criminal cases in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York began with the prosecutor's recommendation for punishment. This was contrary to the practice in the State Courts where the judge took no recommendations. As Chief Assistant to my predecessor, the late John F. X. McGohey, one of my assigned responsibilities was sentence recommendation. Upon succeeding him in 1949, I raised the subject with the late Chief Judge John C. Knox. He requested that I continue the practice of recommending sentence. In my six years in the office I recommended many such, hundreds, and I can count on my fingers the cases where judges modified my recommendation.

Now, to the point of the Professor's claim. I was never overruled by anybody. No one in Justice or out ever directed me, let alone overruled me on the matter of recommendation of sentence.

I was the only prosecutor in the Rosenberg case. While some of my assistants assisted in preparation for trial and I let four of them examine some of the witnesses, I took the lead. All policy decisions were mine and mine alone. Advice I sought and took, but I repeat, final decision was always mine.

On the matter of the Rosenberg sentences, I had decided to make the recommendations which later were imposed. I made no recommendation at sentence at the direction of the sentencing judge, in these circumstances. The day before sentence he asked for my views. I gave them and he inquired regarding the views of the Department of Justice. I had not solicited any. He asked me to seek these. I flew to Washington, met with the late Deputy Attorney General Peyton Ford and the late Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division, James McInerney. They conveyed the views of your predecessor J. Edgar Hoover. There were differences all around among them, but capital punishment for one or both was in not out. I left to return to New York, asked to telephone to Peyton Ford that night for final word on possible reconciliation of their views. I did so but the Washington situation remained at variance. It was at a public function that night that I phoned Mr. Ford in the presence of the judge who was attending the same event. Upon narrating to him the Washington division I was then asked by the judge to refrain from making any recommendation for punishment the next day in the course of my closing statement at sentence.

There you have direct evidence of the facts in contradiction to Professor Weinstein's story.

You may use this in any way to keep the record straight.

Truly yours,

M. C. H. Kelley

Memorandum

TO : SAC ROBERT C. DENZ

FROM : ASSISTANT DIRECTOR LA PRADE

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG; ETHEL ROSENBERG; ETAL

DATE: 5/2/55

DIRECTOR

This will record a telephone call received from Judge IRVING KAUFMAN this morning, at which time he expressed considerable concern over an article in the current issue of ESQUIRE magazine containing considerable information from the two sons of the ROSENBERGS, which article is written by a reporter by the name of MORGAN. He also indicated that last evening at the Federal Bar Association meeting one of the prosecutors in the case related he is being interviewed by NEWSWEEK magazine for an article that is to appear in the immediate future.

Judge KAUFMAN expressed considerable concern over an organization the name of which he understands to be "National Committee to Reopen the Rosenberg Case", adding this organization is aggressively pursuing re-airing the matter and will be taking full page ads in the New York Times containing support from leading citizens. One such person, he mentioned, was LINUS PAULING. These ads are allegedly designed to elicit support for the cause of the Committee and will culminate in a rally at Carnegie Hall.

I informed Judge KAUFMAN that we have been following these matters and bringing them to the attention of our headquarters in Washington, D. C. and they certainly are being appropriately brought to the attention of the Department of Justice. He emphasized he thought that a counter-move should be taken. He alluded to the fact that during the days of J. EDGAR HOOVER there were many such actions taken and he understands that the FBI today is not as aggressive. I pointed out to Judge KAUFMAN that we are as concerned as ever. However, we must rely upon the Department of Justice for any action that we take and I am encouraged by the attitude of Attorney General LEVI and his stand to support the FBI and hopefully in the future our efforts will be more noticeable. He volunteered that if he could ever do anything with the Department to provide support in these matters he would not hesitate to call. Deputy Attorney General TYLER and I expressed appreciation for his offer.

ROSENBERG; ETAL

Judge KAUFMAN is obviously alarmed over the publicity and the activities of this Committee. I tried to mitigate his fears. However, he pointed out that his concern is so intense that he has asked the Deputy Marshal to escort him to various meetings. He noted that in the past Assistant Director MALONE has provided an Agent for this. He asked if I thought it was proper for the Marshal to do it or would I want to provide an Agent. I informed him that it was entirely proper for the Marshal to provide such service and his decision to do that was accordingly quite appropriate.

I do not feel that we should assume the responsibility of providing escort service to Judge KAUFMAN. These developments should be fully explored with the Bureau being advised. It is also desired that the Bureau be apprised of my decision in connection with the escort service as indicated above.

The following information is furnished for the information of the Bureau:

On 5/2/75, Federal Judge IRVING KAUFMAN contacted ADIC J. WALLACE LA PRADE of the NYO, and advised as follows:

Judge KAUFMAN expressed concern over an article in the current issue of "Esquire" Magazine regarding the Rosenberg case. He also expressed concern regarding the activities of the National Committee to Reopen the Rosenberg Case, which organization has subscribed to full page newspaper ads advocating a re-airing of this case. The Judge expressed his opinion that some counter-action should be taken to combat the attention derived from this activity.

Judge KAUFMAN indicated that he is so alarmed over the publicity received by the above committee, that he has requested a Deputy US Marshal to escort him to various affairs where he has been requested as a speaker.

Judge KAUFMAN inquired if the above was proper, and he was advised that it was entirely proper that he should request such service from the office of the US Marshal.

The NYO is not familiar with the magazine article mentioned by KAUFMAN.

The NYO did not offer to provide any escort service for Judge KAUFMAN, and agreed with KAUFMAN's decision that this was a proper request of the US Marshal's Office.

The above is provided for the information of the Bureau. No additional action will be taken by the NYO.

The Rosenberg Jury

APR 22 1954
THE NEW YORK PUBLIC LIBRARY
ASTOR LENOX TILDEN FOUNDATION
500 5TH AVENUE
NEW YORK 17, N.Y.

Like the snail left in a room after a corpse has been removed, Julius and Ethel, the only American-born atomic espionageists, were executed by the electric chair on June 19, 1953, the day President Eisenhower again turned down a plea for clemency. A work of fiction would have ended with their deaths. But life is not as orderly as fiction, and does not obey the necessities of form. I cannot think of another case in the annals of twentieth-century American justice that has received as much sustained attention over so long a period of time. The Rosenbergs have become the most internationally celebrated martyrs since Captain Dreyfus.

In a steady procession of books, revisionist writers kept the case alive. Their thesis was that the Rosenbergs had been framed, that theirs was a political trial, that there had been no atomic secret to steal in the first place, and that Judge Irving R. Kaufman, who presided over the trial, was blinded by the cold-war fog of the early Fifties. The best revisionists, such as Walter and Miriam Schneir in Invitation to an Inquest, were like art restorers cleaning an old master. They clarified dark corners, brought out the true colors, and filled in missing flourishes in the design. They labored over the canvas so thoroughly that a second painting was revealed under the first, of a later period, and they announced to the world that they had discovered a forgery. They were followed by counter-revisionists, such as Louis Nizer in The Implosion Conspiracy, who said, after working with basically the same material, that although the corners might need restoring and certain details in the composition were blurred, the old master was genuine.

In 1974, two television programs, one fictional and one a documentary, were shown nationally and served as further reminders that the Rosenbergs are still with us. They are with us not only as a case but also as a cause, in which a sizeable number of persons continue to believe. Twenty-one years after their deaths, on June 17, 1974, Carnegie Hall was sold out for an evening devoted to the reopening of the case. Onstage, blowups of Picasso's sketches of Julius and Ethel, looking like saints without halos, dwarfed the participants. After so many years, the speakers could still summon a genuine sense of outrage. They talked about new evidence, and files the F.B.I. refused to open. The three thousand in the audience, including standees, were concerned enough to have paid between five and fifty dollars a ticket. They sat through an evening of speeches that slayed the dead horse of the Fifties, and a reading by a group of actors including Rip Torn, Jane Alexander, and Howard da Silva, of the Rosenbergs' death-house letters, which sounded so obviously composed with the thought of posthumous publication as to rob them of any true emotion.

The stars of the evening were Morton Sobell, the Rosenbergs' codefendant, who, having refused offers to take a plea, had been sentenced to thirty years in prison, and was released on parole after serving eighteen years, in 1969; and the Rosenbergs' two sons, Michael and Robert, who, after their parents' execution, took the name of the family that adopted them, the Meersopols. Here was twenty-seven-year-old Robert, blond and long-haired, and taking after his mother, and here was thirty-one-year-old Michael, with his father's dark hair, moustache, and sensitive features, and they announced that they were dedicating their lives to seeking redress for their parents. It was as if they had been given a mandate not to let their memories rest.

most of them. They feel it is rightfully theirs. Their birthright was the Rosenberg case," and their claim of ownership depends upon their parents' vindication. That the property was theirs admitted of no argument. Their parents' innocence was a passionately held, unshakable conviction.

There were, however, twelve jurors, acceptable to the defense and prosecution, who had no special interest in the case, and who had found Julius and Ethel Rosenberg guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, on the basis of the evidence. They had some claim to expertise in the matter, having sat through a three-week trial and sifted the evidence to reach a verdict. Were the jurors rogues and villains who had made a mockery of justice? Were they unintentional, gullible accomplices in a conspiracy to frame the Rosenbergs? Were they decent people who had performed their civic duty to the best of their ability?

None of the writers, revisionist or anti-revisionist, had bothered to interview the jurors. One television program, produced by NPACT for the Public Broadcasting System, The Unquiet Deaths of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, did interview five jurors, but their remarks were perfunctory and edited to fit the general thrust of the program—that the Rosenbergs did not get a fair trial. Now, after twenty-four years, how would the jurors feel, and what would they remember? Did they, viewing the case with hindsight, still believe they had reached a correct verdict? Did they have doubts? Did they sometimes feel they had sent an innocent man and woman to their deaths? Did they continue to be affected by the case, as so many others seemed to be? Were they at ease with their consciences?

Those were some of the questions I wanted answered when I began to look for the Rosenberg jurors. Of the eleven men and one woman, two were dead, two I could not find, three would not discuss the case, and five, including the foreman, I was able to talk to. From their recollections, matched against the trial record, some new elements have emerged and are reported here for the first time:

■ The jurors agreed from the start of their deliberations about the Rosenbergs' guilt. But one juror held out because he could not accept the possibility of a woman being sent to the electric chair. Because of that juror, the deliberations lasted nearly eight hours and went into a second day.

■ The jurors today feel their verdict was the correct one. Nothing they have read or seen has shaken their belief in the Rosenbergs' guilt. They feel they had no ax to grind, that they judged the case solely on the evidence, and that they did a good job.

■ The absence of a single Jewish juror has long been attributed to systematic prosecution challenges. The evidence shows that many apparently Jewish prospective jurors excused themselves from serving on the jury.

■ Judge Kaufman, if the memory of one juror serves, acted on one occasion during the trial in a way that could be called tampering with the jury.

■ The blunders of the defense did as much damage to the Rosenbergs as the case presented by the prosecution.

The twelve Rosenberg jurors were chosen from a panel of three hundred, and when whose names were taken from lists of registered voters and who were summoned to the federal courthouse on Manhattan's Foley Square on March 6, 1951. Because this was an espionage case involving a possible death sentence, a record number of veniremen was called. They filled Courtroom 110, the largest in the U.S. Southern District of New York.

Judge Kaufman, the forty-year-old "boy judge," a short man with small eyes and slicked-down black hair whose wife's maiden name was Rosenberg, gave the defense thirty challenges to the government's twenty, "in view of the fact that there are several defendants on trial."

Judge Kaufman told the panel that the purpose of his questioning in the voir dire was to bring out any bias or sympathy. "The minds of the jurors," he said, "should be the same as the sheet of paper with nothing on it."

The clerk read the indictment. A husband and wife, Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, were charged with conspiring to steal secret information about the atom bomb and passing it on to the Soviet Union. Their alleged espionage had begun in 1944, while the United States was still at war. According to the 1917 Espionage Act, drafted with disloyal German-Americans in mind, spying in wartime was a capital crime, but no one had ever been sentenced to death under the act. Morton Sobell, a radar expert, was charged with being a part of the conspiracy. The indictment listed twelve overt acts of involvement in the conspiracy. The principal witnesses against the Rosenbergs were Ethel's own brother, David Greenglass, and his wife, Ruth.

And the Rosenberg Kids

They never doubted their parents' innocence; now they intend to prove it

Twenty-two years later, the photograph survives. Manny Bloch is taking the Rosenberg children to their parents in the Sing Sing death house. There's a gun tower and barbed wire in the background. Six-year-old Robby is huddled under Bloch's arm, frightened, bewildered. Ten-year-old Michael strides a bit ahead of his brother and the lawyer. He's wearing a peaked cap with furry ear flaps. His hands are in his pants pockets. He doesn't look afraid at all. "My mommy and daddy couldn't have done this," He knew because he had asked them, "Are you innocent?" "Of course we are," his parents told him.

Michael is now thirty-one and a teacher of economics at a small, private college in Massachusetts. Robby, twenty-seven, is studying for his doctorate in anthropology. Long ago, while they were growing up, Michael told Robby what his parents had said. "Of course we are."

"The thing that held us together, the thing that kept us going," Robby says, "was the fact that we felt our parents were right and that they were good people and they had been wronged." Michael agrees: "There was the knowledge, the secure feeling that there wasn't a shred of possibility that what everybody was saying about them was true."

Robby was too young to remember the worst of the long years, but Michael does. After their parents were arrested, the brothers were sent to stay with their maternal grandmother. She was "selfish, hardened by poverty," Michael is very bitter about her.

Mrs. Greenglass wanted her daughter Ethel to "cooperate," save herself as her son David had done. She wanted to make things "easier for the family," as Robby puts it.

Michael's memory is less forgiving. "She didn't really want to take care of us. You know, from her point of view, it would have been smarter for her to treat us nicely, as a way of getting through to my mother. But, well, maybe that was just her restlessness coming out."

She shunted the boys to their other grandmother. "We would have gone to her sooner if she hadn't been sick." Robby remembers Grandma Rosenberg as well as Michael does. They alternate a litany of praise.

"She was a very courageous woman," Robby says.

"She believed in her son," says Michael.

"She went to the prison and she visited my father," Robby says. "She believed what he had to say and she supported him and she felt a family obligation to Michael and me. She did what she could. She had high blood pressure and she was sick even when she was taking care of us. I mean, it was a strain on her. The whole trial was a strain on her."

It was thought best to move the boys out of New York. Too many in the city knew who they were. Neighborhood children tormented them. So, they were placed with a family in Toms River, New Jersey. "We were there until it was discovered who we were," Robby recounts, "and then the school district didn't want us. They threw us out." "Because we weren't legal residents," Michael deadpans.

They returned to New York and lived with Anne and Abel Meeropol. He was a songwriter. She was active in leftist causes. After the Rosenbergs died, the Meeropols legally adopted the boys. "I think our second parents took on a real hard and a very thankless task," Robby muses. His brother objects: "They didn't do it for the recogni-

(P.J.'s) had been given concerning the nature of the trial.

As Judge Kaufman went to the list of general questions, jurors began to ask to be excused. Some said they could not give a fair opinion. Others said that, as World War Two veterans, they would be biased. A large contingent balked at serving in a capital case. "Your Honor, I am prejudiced somewhat against capital punishment," was an oft-heard phrase, insuring that the eventual twelve jurors would be men and women in favor of capital punishment.

So many jurors asked to be excused that Judge Kaufman commented: "I hope all these statements are being made in good faith and not in an effort to avoid what might seem to the jurors an unpleasant task." It was easy to be excused. All you had to say was that difficult trial, any one back to your job and your family. It became clear that a number of P.J.'s with apparently Jewish names were going to be excused. Perhaps they were reluctant to be in judgment of a member of their own faith, with the implied possibility of bias. Whatever their reasons were, Ely Honig, Philip Frankel, Alfred Seymour Rucin, L. H. Horitz, Morris Haber, Samuel Begun, Hyman S. Scher, and Bernard H. Sakin, all asked to be excused.

The rounds of challenges began with the ranks of veniremen already thinned. Heading the government team was forty-five-year-old Irving H. Saypol, the U.S. attorney for the Southern District, the most important federal prosecuting post in the country. Square-jawed and tight-lipped, Saypol had won convictions tion. They did it because they wanted to give love and they wanted to receive love, and they got that."

Adoption gave them new identities. Now they were Michael and Robby Meeropol. No one knew their secret—not in grade school, not in high school, not in college. When Robby joined S.D.S., his "primary worry was getting arrested and the possibility that, at some trial, the publicity would come out about my parents." It never happened.

The brothers hid from the world, not themselves. They were the sons of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg and they were not ashamed. "As teenagers, both Michael and I were worried about that," Robby begins. "But we didn't have any self-hatred," Michael concludes.

They told their secret to the women they married. "It was hard," Michael admits, frightening to take that risk. Later, they also told a very few close friends. Otherwise, they lived in anonymity. But, Michael says, "we spent all our lives knowing that sooner or later, it would have to end." It did—on June 19, 1973, the twentieth anniversary of the death of their parents.

On that day, they filed suit against attorney Louis Nizer for his book The Implosion Conspiracy. They signed their names and addresses to the court papers. Reporters reached them by nightfall.

"We had to do it," says Robby. "If we didn't, we couldn't have lived with ourselves." Nizer had quoted from the Rosenbergs' death-house letters to their sons. "That's our legacy! That . . . is . . . it!" Michael shouts. "Our parents left us nothing but their lives and a large part of their lives is in their letters." Worse, Nizer had contrasted the brothers with "the sorry case of their parents." "The implication," Robby rages, "is that we succeeded because we reject what our parents stood for. We had to force him to retract."

The battle soon became broader. "Once we were out in the open," says Robby, "we had no alternative but to reopen the case. I mean, here we are, standing up and affirming our parents' innocence, and the papers say, 'What are you going to do about it? Nothing!'"

Of course, reopen the case. They had been time bombs, ticking twenty years, set to blow the lid off. They had never doubted their parents' innocence. "Of course we are." "We knew it in our gut before we knew it intellectually," Michael says. He began studying the case when he was twelve: "I understood enough to realize it was an unfair trial. I read the transcripts much later. Then I was convinced."

He saw holes: Harry Gold testifying he stole secrets in Alibi; a boutique on a day he was in New York; the console table that came from Macy's, not the Russians; the snapshots that were family portraits, not passport photos for fleeing spies; the scientist who said the only atomic secret worth stealing was the fact a bomb could be made, not the "caricature" of a bomb presented at the trial. Michael was convinced his parents had died innocent.

He had not been allowed to read about the electrocutions. His brother was too young to read. But the newspaper stories were very vivid. They described how smoke rose from Ethel Rosenberg, as the current jolted through her. Michael read about her death when he was older. "It makes me angry," he says, then, his voice growing softer, "it makes me cry."

Robby has his mother's curly hair, round face, and soft brown eyes. Michael, with his steel-rimmed glasses and his moustache, is an eerie reminiscence of his father in the old newspaper photographs. He is nearing the age of his father when he died.

"You know," says Robby, "you think about it as having happened so long ago. But they would have been, now, fifty-five, fifty-six."

"Very vigorous, full of life," Michael added, "exchanging adult analyses and information with us."

"It would have been nice," Robby said. "Our memories were cut short before we ever had any real time with them."

"I play guitar, sing folk music," Michael noted. "My mother was a singer. It would have been delightful."

"For another twenty years from now, that could have gone on," said Robby. "Maybe even thirty."

It must hurt. "You get used to being yourself. It's your condition and you have no other standard by which to judge," Robby was defensive. "I don't know what the level of hurt is for everyone else. Everyone has things in their life that happen to them. Everything is relative. I mean, what is the level of pain? What is the level of hurt?"

Michael had another answer. "It hurts," he said. "It still hurts."

—GERRY NAUM

against Alger Hiss, William Remington, the eleven Communist leaders tried under the Smith Act. Time magazine had dubbed him "the nation's number one legal hunter of top Communists." Among Saypol's five assistants was a slight, compulsively energetic young lawyer four years out of law school, eager to cut his teeth on an important case, Roy Cohn, who would go on to greater notoriety as an assistant to Senator Joseph McCarthy. Cohn recalled that "the prosecution had no special tactic for jury selection. We were so sure of the overwhelming nature of the evidence that nothing short of actual bias in favor of Communism would have made any difference. Of course, the government generally looks for law-abiding citizens, and the defense looks for oddballs and nonconformists. In the Rosenberg case, their shot was to hang the jury, to find one juror who would hold out."

The government systematically challenged, not Jews, but housewives. Not because they were afraid that a mother would refuse to vote a guilty verdict against Ethel Rosenberg, the mother of two, Roy Cohn recalled, but because "if you get housewives and mothers, if the jury is out late or is held overnight, they get nervous because nobody is feeding the kids."

Defending the Rosenbergs with only a modest fee from the court was the father-and-son team of Alexander and Emanuel Bloch. Manny Bloch, fifty, specialized in civil rights cases and had defended several Communists. His father, seventy-four, was a business lawyer specializing in the sale of bakeries. He had never practiced criminal law. Doing research for the Blochs was a young woman lawyer, Gloria Agrin (today she is Gloria Agrin Josephson), who recalled that "the defense's only concern was to eliminate people with obvious anti-Communist sentiments. In a sense we were looking for iconoclasts, people who could stand up to the influence of the times. When a black juror got on, we thought, well that might be helpful, but a black alone against eleven whites, it could go either way. We thought that with a woman on the jury, there might be sympathy there."

Neither side remembers any particular plan to challenge Jewish jurors. One of the few things Mr. Cohn and Miss Agrin agree on is that a Jewish juror "could go either way." "He could be like Judge Kaufman, who bent over backward to be severe," Miss Agrin said, "or he could be sympathetic."

At nearly one p.m. on March 7, 1951, both the defense and the government had only one challenge left. The last two of the original three hundred veniremen went into the three-tiered jury box to the right of the judge's bench and sat in the two remaining green leather swivel armchairs. They were Mrs. Lisette Dammars, a former switchboard operator whose daughter had married a member of the National Guard, and Charles J. Duda, a bookkeeper whose grandparents had been born in Czechoslovakia and one of whose relatives had served in the Navy. If Bloch used up his last challenge on either of these two, he would be forced to take whomever the court brought in as added panelists. He would probably face an all-male jury. He decided to stay with what he had; so did the government. The court declared the jurors "satisfactory all around." It had taken one and a half days to pick them. Judge Kaufman's reputation for efficiency was deserved.

Who were these twelve out of an original three hundred who had survived the screening process? The foreman, automatically designated by his being seated in the No. 1 chair, was Vincent Lebonotte, thirty, an assistant sales manager for the R. H. Macy branch in White Plains, and a graduate like Judge Kaufman, of Fordham University, who majored in psychology. He served in World War Two, in Patton's army, ending up as a military policeman in Germany.

Today, he is an agent for the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, and is putting four of five children through college. He has trouble defending his conservative views against his children, who seem devoted to shaking the foundations of his beliefs. He defended Agnew until "Agnew pulled the rug from under me" by pleading no contest to criminal charges and resigning. At fifty-four, Lebonotte is stockier than at the time of the trial, and his wavy hair has greyed, but he has the same bright blue eyes and the same dedication to the task at hand. On the bulletin board in the John Hancock White Plains office, his name leads the list on the pink performance schedule. "I believe in what I sell," he said. "Last year I had zero lapses. That means the business I get, I keep."

The other eleven were:

■ Richard Booth, a caterer for the Seminole tennis club in Forest Hills, Queens. He had been married twenty-two years. His wife was a housekeeper for a family in Long Island. They had no children. I was unable to locate Richard Booth.

■ Howard G. Becker was a forty-one-year-old auditor for the Irving Trust Company who lived in Mamaroneck with his wife and two children. He had started as a messenger at the age of seventeen, after graduating from Theodore Roosevelt High School in the Bronx, and worked his way up. "In those days," he said, "during the Depression, you stayed put." Just as he was due to be inducted, in 1944, fathers were deferred. "I was saved by the bell," he says. Becker started serving on juries in 1937 and "they still haven't let go of me. Our company did not frown on this, they expected you to do it as a civic duty, they didn't dock you on your pay."

Today, at sixty-five, Becker is a walking advertisement for the virtue of settled habits. He has just retired from the Irving Trust, where he had become an administrative assistant in the personal banking division; he lives in the same house in Mamaroneck. He is trim and youthful, with a full head of salt-and-pepper hair. His first wife died in 1958 of multiple sclerosis, and he remarried four years later, "at the ripe old age of fifty-one." He is a Lutheran, has served on his local church board. His wife teaches Sunday school and sings in the choir. He is enjoying retirement. He is the kind who knows how to keep busy.

■ Charles W. Christie was an auditor for the Tidewater Associated Oil Company, part of the Getty oil interests. Questioned by Judge Kaufman in the voir dire, Christie said: "My company has contracts with the government and I am also casually acquainted with a member of the F.B.I." Bloch asked the court to question Christie further. How long had he known the F.B.I. man? "Approximately two years," Christie said. "We are both members of a church organization. . . . Sometimes we see one another once a week; other times we don't." Bloch did not challenge. Christie had two young daughters, and might be expected to show sympathy.

Today, Christie, white-haired and round-faced, is still with the oil company, working in their Delaware refinery. When I called him, he said he did not wish to discuss the trial. He had been interviewed by the NIACT team (producer Alvin Goldstein gave me access to the transcript), and their effort to "white-wash" the Rosenbergs had upset him. "I'm down on and asks for thirty minutes and... what you should think about it."

■ Mrs. Lisette D. Dan... then fifty, was a Bronx working wife with a married daughter, and the defense was pleased to have a wife and mother on the jury. Six years ago, Mrs. Dammas' husband Rudolf died and she went to live with her daughter, Mrs. Grace Kraus, in Huntington, Long Island. The telephone was disconnected when I called, so I went to Huntington to see Mrs. Dammas. Her daughter answered the door and said: "My mother passed away in her sleep on the twentieth of March. She was seventy-three."

Had Mrs. Dammas ever wavered in her opinion that the Rosenbergs were guilty?

"My mother never wavered in her opinion in her life," Mrs. Kraus said with finality.

■ Harold H. Axley, forty-two at the time of the trial, was a partner in a Bronx bar and restaurant called Harley's. He grew up in a Southern Illinois railroad town, and spent the early Depression years working in Chicago for Western Electric. He moved to New York in 1936, where he met his wife Ruth. Axley spent the war years working on the Brooklyn piers in the Army Transport Service as a supervisor. "I had seventy-five men working for me," he recalls.

Axley was acceptable to the defense; he was not a veteran, and he had two daughters and a son.

Today, Harold Axley and his wife live in a spacious, pleasantly furnished mobile home near the Hickory Run State Park in Pennsylvania with their Shetland sheepdog Shawn. At sixty-six, Axley is fit and ruddy from outdoor life, with straight fine white hair, a fleshy face, and light eyes. He is a passionate golfer, and appears to be enjoying his retirement. When I went to see him, he was at the golf club. His wife called him there and said: "The reporter you're supposed to see has been waiting half an hour." (In fact, I had just arrived.) Axley hurried home, settled down in an armchair, and asked his wife for a highball. She pretended not to hear, and Axley had to talk without refreshment.

In the New York Times story on the Rosenbergs' conviction published on March 30, 1951, Axley was erroneously named as the one juror who had held out against conviction and caused the deliberations to go into a second day. He still wonders who could have leaked that bit of misinformation.

■ James A. Gibbons, forty-eight at the time of the trial, had been an accountant for the New York City Omnibus Company for twenty-eight years, and lived in the Bronx with his wife and two children. He belonged to Mike Quill's Transport Workers Union of America, C.I.O., and was active in union affairs, a possible reason for challenge by the prosecution that was overlooked.

When I called Gibbons, now a spry seventy-one and a retired widower still living at the same Bronx address, he said: "I've just passed away... when people call me about that case, that's what I say. I just want to let it lie."

I had reason to believe that Gibbons was the holdout juror, and I sent my wife Nancy to see him on the theory that a man who had wanted to save Ethel Rosenberg would not be rude to a woman. When Nancy rang the bell of his apartment in the Parkchester section of the Bronx, he repeated that he did not want to discuss the trial.

"I've come all the way from Manhattan," Nancy gave me a cup of coffee?" Gibbons was extremely courteous, opened the door, made coffee, and eventually admitted me. He was the holdout juror. A short man with a rim of hair around a bald head, he was still excitable when he discussed the case. He kept moving as he talked, and folded sheets that had come in the laundry. He seemed divided between his wish to "let it lie" and an eagerness to disclose his role. He still seemed to feel that if he had held out successfully Ethel Rosenberg's life could have been saved and that this was a "burden" he still carried.

■ Emanuel Clarence Dean, the one black on the jury, worked for Con Ed demonstrating electrical appliances to a black clientele. He was single, fifty-seven at the time of the trial, and he lived in Manhattan on East Seventy-fifth Street. Dean died in 1968, leaving us to wonder whether he had felt any sympathy for the Rosenbergs, or whether, as the only black on the jury, he had decided to "go along to get along."

■ Chauncey C. Miller, at fifty-eight the oldest member of the jury, was secretary of the Board of Commissioners of Pilots, a New York State agency. He was married and had a son, and belonged to the American Legion. Today, Miller is eighty-one and lives with his son in Scarsdale. He declined to discuss the case.

■ Charles J. Duda, at twenty-nine the youngest member of the jury, was an auditor for Davis & Lawrence Company, a firm with offices in Bronxville that makes concentrates for soft drinks. Duda, the last juror chosen, had a wife and son, and had never served on a jury before, although he has served many times since. Today, at fifty-three, Duda is a widower, and has worked his way up to treasurer in his twenty-seven years with Davis & Lawrence. Duda is sharp-featured, with quick, humorous eyes, graying hair, and longish sideburns. Serving on the Rosenberg jury was his one brush with notoriety, and I got the feeling that he remembers it fondly, as an actor might remember an award-winning performance.

■ James Mitchell was an accountant with the firm of Harris, Kerr, Forster & Company, and lived in the Bronx with his wife and two children. He was a World War Two veteran who had served a year in China. He had worked for the post office in 1948 and 1949, and had been the subject of a loyalty probe. He retired some years ago and moved to Phoenix, Arizona, where I was unable to locate him.

■ James Tessitore, then forty-three, was an estimator for the Alco Gravure Division of Publications Corporation, living in Mount Vernon, with three daughters in parochial school and a working wife. Now sixty-seven, he has retired in Toms River, New Jersey, where the two Rosenberg sons spent part of their childhood. When I called him, he said: "It's a closed case. I don't want to talk." A woman's voice in the background shouted: "Just tell him there is nothing more to say." "I'm very busy," Tessitore said, "please don't waste my time."

These eleven men and one woman had three things in common: they were all willing to serve, they were in favor of capital punishment, and not one was Jewish.

It seemed odd that in a trial where the defendants were Jewish, the judge was Jewish, the defense lawyers were Jewish, and the prosecutor and one of his assistants were Jewish, not a single juror was Jewish. John Wexley in his book on the Rosenbergs wrote that the exclusion must have (Continued on page 124)

SENDING JURY

... (How was it possible that not single jury member or alternate was wish when more than thirty percent the population of New York City hap-to be of that faith or ancestry?)

Wexley and others who echoed this were overlooked the fact that the jurors not selected from New York City at from the U.S. Southern District, which includes eleven counties in New York State going as far north as Columbia and Greene Counties, and only two of the five boroughs, Manhattan and the Bronx. The ethnic balance of the Southern District did not mirror
New York City's. Of the twelve Rosenberg jurors, five lived outside the city, in suburbs such as White Plains, Dobbs Ferry, and Mount Vernon.

At the time, it did not occur to jury foreman Vincent Lebonitte that there were no Jews on the jury, "because there was so little inquiry into a man's background." But he remembers that when the death sentence was given to the Rosenbergs, "I felt good that this [the sentencing] was strictly a Jewish show. It was Jew against Jew. It wasn't the Christians beating the Jews." He also remembers thinking that "any other judge would have been more lenient than Kaufman ... the Jews hated the Rosenbergs for the disgrace they had brought upon their race. Kaufman wanted to make an example of someone who had disgraced the Jewish race."

As for capital punishment, the jurors
I talked to still believe in it. "I did then and still do believe in capital punishment," Harold Axley said. "If someone killed my wife and child I feel they should be punished for it." "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," Vincent Lebonitte said. "I'm a soft individual, but I still find we are going to have to go back to it. Society will disintegrate unless people fear dying for the acts they commit."

One other thing: These twelve had not asked to be excused. You could almost say they wanted to serve. "It would have been easy to cop out," Vincent Lebonitte remembers. "The pet phrase during jury selection was: 'Your Honor, I feel I can't sit with propriety in this case because of prejudice.' When I got the number one chair I knew that meant I'd be foreman, and I was frightened out of my mind. I asked myself, should I stay or should I get out? I didn't feel up to it. Then I thought, if I leave off suddenly else might be anxious to get a spot like this. I knew it had to do with a conspiracy to commit espionage. Suppose one of their cohorts was in the spot? Would they chicken out? I forced myself to stay."

Judge Kaufman had told the jurors that their minds should be like "white sheets of paper." This was like asking them to induce temporary amnesia. How else, whatever their goodwill, could they have remained unaffected by the climate of these intensely partisan times? By 1951, it was assumed that the Soviet Union was bent on the overthrow of the American system. Com-

... was obsessed with documenting the activities of the Communist party in the United States. Before the war, the party had been legal and open. Now, citizens were prosecuted for their membership, and the word Communist became so disreputable that the courts ruled it was libelous.

The plainings of cold-war rhetoric echoed daily in the media: Are you now or have you ever been a member of the Communist party? The Fifth Amendment, intended as a protection against self-incrimination, came to be seen as a proof of treason. Through the revelations of Whittaker Chambers and Elizabeth Bentley, a Soviet spy network was exposed, and the equation between Communist and foreign agent was established.

Fear of the Russians was also based on the fact that in 1949 they had successfully exploded their first atom bomb. The comfortable feeling that we alone had it gave way to the suspicion that they must have stolen the secret from us. Their backward technology and war-damaged industry could not have produced it without help from their spies. The magic device that insured postwar peace had been burglarized.

In February, 1950, the German-born physicist Klaus Fuchs, who had worked on the Los Alamos project in New Mexico, was arrested in England. He confessed and was sentenced to fourteen years. In May, two F.B.I. agents questioned Fuchs in his British prison, and three days later, the first American was arrested and charged with atomic espionage. He was Harry Gold, a thirty-nine-year-old bachelor chemist employed in a Philadelphia hospital, who admitted that he had met Fuchs eight times and acted as a courier between Fuchs and a Russian consular official. It was Gold who led the F.B.I. to the Green-glasses, and it was the Greenglasses who implicated the Rosenbergs.

Nineteen-fifty was the year of Senator McCarthy's rise to prominence and of the arrests of the first American atom spies. It was also the year the Korean war broke out, on June 24.
When American troops were committed, the public mind felt more strongly than ever that international Communism was the enemy. The connection between atom spies and the Korean war was seen as: "They stole the bomb from us and now that they've got it they feel they can start wars whenever and wherever they like."

These three headlines from The New York Times of 1950 give some idea of the priorities that year: ATOM BOMB
KILLERS FOR CITY AT COST OF $450,000;
QUERIED IF SOVIETS START WAR, ATOM-IC BOMB ATTACK EXPECTED IN NEW YORK
FIRST; GALLUP POLL MAJORITY FAVORS
DEATH FOR TRAITORS.

In this context, and with the insistent drumbeat of pretrial publicity the Rosenbergs received, what did it mean to ask the jurors to keep a fair and open mind? Did it mean that they would be able to check their beliefs and opinions outside the courtroom, with their hats and coats? Or did it mean that an alleg Communist spy would have as much as to a fair trial in the United States in 1951 as a heretic in sixteenth-century Spain?

The jurors I talked to felt they had reached their verdict solely on the basis of the evidence, in spite of their distaste for what the Rosenbergs represented. Several jurors knew nothing about the case when the trial began.
"I'd never heard of these people before," Charles Duda said. "I came as a knew they'd been arrested. It never even a complete surprise." "The first I heard of it was in the courtroom," Vincent Lebonitte said. "I had no idea what it was all about until the indictment was read." Harold Axley said. The media create the illusion that they saturate the country, but the extent of public indifference to important news stories is seldom measured.

Whatever anti-Communist prejudices the jurors brought into the courtroom must be weighed against Judge Kaufman's repeated warnings not to judge the Rosenbergs on the basis of their possible membership in the Communist party. To the jurors, the black-robed judge sitting on his high bench was a
viewed him with ... well, reverence is not too strong a word. Harold Axley felt that "Kaufman's running of the trial verged on perfection. He bent over backward to give both sides a chance.
He was constantly telling us that Communism was not a factor. He harped on this, and I tried to dispel it from my mind."

Vincent Lebonitte recalled that "in my time a Communist was a monster, someone who was going to destroy me and my way of life. They were going to enslave us. This was strongest in my high-school and college years. A Communist had leprosy." Conditioned as he was by the thinking of his time, Lebo-nitte nonetheless feels that he judged the case "strictly on the facts presented." "The defense and the judge said that Communism was not on trial," Howard Becker recalls. "But I started to get the impression that Communism was on trial. Although it was never proved in court, I felt they were members of the Communist party. That doesn't necessarily mean they were spies. But after all, the Communists were out to overthrow the government."

The trial lasted most of March, from the sixth until the twenty-ninth. The jurors arrived in the morning, heard testimony, and went out for a quick lunch in the Foley Square neighborhood.
Groups of Rosenberg sympathizers would come up to them on the courthouse steps and say: "You must remember that this is the mother of two children." In the afternoon they heard more testimony, and went home in the evening. Here again, as when they had been asked to suspend all their private beliefs, the jurors were being asked to behave in an unrealistic manner by not reading about or discussing the trial.
As Harold Axley put it, "You can shut yourself off to a certain extent, but I'd be riding the subway, and I'm a guy

not going to let some writer impress me, every writer has a different point of view, and I was there. But anyone who tells you he can shut himself off completely during a trial has never served on a jury."

The jurors weighed the evidence, and responded to the people involved, the defendants, the witnesses, and the lawyers. After twenty-four years, memories have blurred, but bits of the trial are still vivid: snatches of testimony, the attitude of a witness, a defense maneuver, some bit of courtroom action.

In broad outline, the Rosenberg trial came down to two totally contradictory stories. The Greenglasses testified with a wealth of detail and connective tissue that the Rosenbergs had recruited them to spy. The Rosenbergs flatly and completely denied having been involved in any kind of espionage. The jury had to decide whom to believe.

But before deciding, they were told something about the nature of the material Greenglass had confessed he had passed on. In 1951, we were still in the atomic dark ages. Practically nothing was known about the bomb except that it could kill and mutilate as no other weapon could. The jurors had to learn new words like "implosion." Jurors are customarily awed by experts. In the Rosenberg trial, they were ready to believe whatever the experts told them. They were all the more ready to believe as a result of what seemed at the time an inexplicable defense tactic.

Early in the trial, David Greenglass had described how he prepared the material he turned over to Julius Rosenberg, which included a sketch of the atom bomb. When a replica of that sketch was offered in evidence, Emanuel Bloch suggested that it be impounded so that the public could not see it.

"That is a rather strange request, coming from the defendant," Irving Sappol said.

Judge Kaufman agreed that the sketch would be sealed after it had been shown to the jury.

Bloch asked to speak to the judge out of the jury's earshot. "Even at this late day this information may be of advantage to a foreign power," he said. "So I am satisfied that this be kept secret."

Judge Kaufman cleared the courtroom of spectators but allowed the press to remain.

The jurors had already heard a distinguished professor of physical chemistry, Walter S. Koski, who had worked on the Los Alamos bomb project and been in direct contact with David Greenglass. Koski said the sketch of the atom bomb prepared by Greenglass accurately described the 1945 experiments in "the development of the atomic bomb." This was information no other nation had at the time, Koski added. It gave away the principle of the third, or Nagasaki, bomb, which was, Koski said, "the use of a combination of high explosives of appropriate shape to produce a symmetrical converging detonation wave."

thereby contributed to the national security. Emanuel Bloch helped convince the jury that the Rosenbergs had in fact stolen the most important secret of the atomic age.

Explaining Bloch's action, Gloria Agrin said: "He had a very real problem. Sappol had told him at the start of the trial—if your clients do not confess they are doomed. We knew we were facing the death sentence. Bloch wanted to show the court—we are just as patriotic as the others. He was trying to avoid the death sentence by lifting the stigma of treason. It was a courtroom decision, made on the spur of the moment."

The Blochs and Gloria Agrin did not know any more about the atom bomb than the jurors did. They had no reason to question the testimony of respected scientists who had worked on the bomb. Gloria Agrin thought the lens mold had something to do with cameras. "Half-way through the trial," she recalled, "a college friend who had majored in physics explained to me what a lens mold was and how it might have been used in an explosion. We had no way of judging how important the allegedly stolen information really was. We learned about implosion at the same time as the jury. We had no background in physics or science. We couldn't even get anybody to walk into our office and explain the indictment."

After the trial, many scientists affirmed that the concept of atomic secrecy was a fallacy. But at the time, said Gloria Agrin, "where were all these lovely scientists? Not one of them would speak up for fear of getting involved. Philip Morrison [co-inventor of an atomic-bomb patent] did not speak until a year later." Unable to find an expert for the defense who could have put the atomic-secret issue in more congenial perspective, Emanuel Bloch "almost had to take the government's word. Was this rough half-assed sketch of Greenglass's of any use to a foreign power? We had no way of knowing."

Since the defense took the importance of the stolen secrets for granted, it should come as no surprise that the jury did too. Vincent Lebonite remembered that when the court was cleared at Bloch's request, he thought: "This must be really important." Harold Axley believed the experts, "people who had no reason to give anything but the facts, they had no axes to grind, no reason to endear themselves with the government. At that time, I didn't even know the term implosion existed, and they convinced us that it was important."

As the trial progressed, the jurors sized up the principal actors. Morton Sobell, who never took the stand, remained a cipher. Of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, Charles Duda said: "I never saw any two people so devoid of any emotion. I don't think they changed their expressions once during the entire length of the trial. They were stone-faced. You couldn't help but notice it."

lious would have spoken if she had permitted him. It was more human. She was more disciplined."

Greenglasses seemed less than human. "Here was a brother sending his sister to the gallows to save his own skin," Vincent Lebonite said. "Making his sister the goat. The defense brought that out time and again." Axley recalls that "Greenglass had a permanent grin on his face—it was not intentional. We studied him real sharply."

The thrust of the defense was to discredit Greenglasses by portraying him as "repulsive." Here again, Bloch miscalculated the jurors' reactions. When it came to choosing between the Rosenbergs' and the Greenglasses' versions of the same events, they chose the latter precisely because they could not believe that anyone could turn in their own flesh and blood and be lying in the bargain. To do something that terrible to his own sister, they reasoned, Greenglass had to be telling the truth. The alternative was too shameful to contemplate. Such was the reaction of decent family men to what was emerging as a family quarrel of frightening proportions.

As Harold Axley put it: "Take young Greenglass. Why would a boy go to this great length to testify against his sister and his brother-in-law and build up such a preponderance of evidence against them, knowing it might mean their lives? I could not visualize this happening. I still can't. I felt that he could not have been lying about doing it in his own sister."

James Gibbons said: "The most terrible and unforgivable thing in the whole case for me was a brother testifying against his sister. I couldn't understand it then and I don't understand it now. Jealousy's just not enough—you just do not testify against a relative unless there is something in it."

Against the defense's expectations, Greenglass, by shocking the jury, established his credibility. And if the jury believed the Greenglasses, the evidence pointing to the Rosenbergs' guilt was overwhelming. As Harold Axley put it: "There were too many elements involved in close alliance. Why would these people do all these things? There was a kind of it to the thing, it all fit."

The Rosenbergs did not help matters when they repeatedly took the Fifth Amendment in reply to questions concerning alleged Communist activities. As Charles Duda remembers, "They took the Fifth so damn many times. They must have thought it would be very damaging not to take it." They used the Fifth quite often," said Vincent Lebonite, "to me it meant they were hiding something, even though it was their constitutional privilege."

By odd coincidence, when the Rosenberg trial was in its final week, Estes Kefauver's traveling crime committee moved into a Foley Square courtroom on a higher floor for eight stars, famous underworld figures such as Frank Costello and Joe Adams. Virginia Hill took the Fifth when they were asked about their ties to crime. The big-time bookie Hank Erickson took the Fifth on the grounds that answering "may intend to criminate me." Downstairs, the Rosenbergs were taking the Fifth concerning their ties to the Communist party. One day, according to Harold Axley, Judge Kaufman cleared the court and asked the jury to stay. Senator Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican and a folksy windbag who was a Kefauver committee stalwart, had come to visit. Judge Kaufman left the bench and went down the aisle to greet the older man. He introduced Senator Tobey to the jurors. "I'm very glad to be here and meet you," Senator Tobey said. "We could use people like you upstairs." If Axley's memory is accurate (four other jurors whom I asked to corroborate the incident did not recall it), the connection between the gangsters and the Rosenbergs, all of them taking the Fifth Amendment, was impressed upon the jury. When I called Judge Kaufman, who is now chief judge of the U.S. court of appeals, to ask about this possible example of tampering with the jury, I was told by a clerk: "Judge Kaufman makes it a rule not to discuss trials over which he has presided."

According to Gloria Agrin, "taking the Fifth was done at the Rosenbergs' insistence. They were Communists but they were afraid that if they admitted it they would be questioned about their Communist connections, and be asked to implicate others, and be cited for contempt of court." How the Rosenbergs, who were defendants in a capital case, could have been worried about a hypothetical contempt citation, remains one of the trial's minor mysteries.

In the trial's final days, there were two witnesses who particularly impressed the jurors because they were, Vincent Lebonitte said, "little bystanders with no axe to grind."

The Rosenbergs' maid, Mrs. Evelyn Cox, testified about a console table which Greenglass said the Rosenbergs had been given by the Russians, and which supposedly had a compartment for developing microfilm. The Rosenbergs said on the stand that they had bought the table at Sears.

It came from... she said that a friend of her husband gave it to him as a gift. Then she added that he hadn't seen him for a long time and it was a sort of wedding present. That is all the talk we ever had about the table."

It was enough to convince Charles Dudd that the Rosenbergs were lying. "They said they bought it at Macy's," he recalled, "but they couldn't produce either a sales slip or the table. Where

After a... Don Schneider, who ran a... shop on Park Row, near the... Building, spe-

Saturday in the middle of June, 1950, Schneider said, the Rosenbergs and their two sons had come in and ordered thirty-six passport photographs. Schneider remembered the Rosenbergs because of the size of the order and because their sons were unruly. Julius Rosenberg had said something about a vacation in France.

To the jurors, Evelyn Cox and Ben Schneider were simple people like themselves, telling their stories without guile. To Vincent Lebonitte, ordering the passport pictures showed intent to flee. It was another brick in the mounting tower of guilt. Both sides rested, and the jurors now heard five hours of summation. "I had to constantly remind myself that all these effects were to impress us," Harold Axley recalled, "that this was their bag, the raising of voices, the lowering of voices, it was all for us."

It was on the afternoon of March 28, at 3:37 p.m., that Judge Kaufman began reading his ten-thousand-word charge. He told the jurors that they were not laymen taking part in a discussion, but sworn officials who had taken an oath to give a true verdict. He cautioned any one juror against monopolizing the deliberations. "Don't be afraid to change your view because of pride and opinion. If you are convinced that your original view is wrong," he advised. "It would be silly for you to sit in a corner and sulk because someone does not agree with you. Talk it out. That is what deliberation means."

He said that as a collective body, their verdict had to be unanimous. He explained that the burden was on the government to establish guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and reminded the jurors that membership in the Communist party or evidence of flight did not constitute presumption of guilt. Finally, Kaufman said, "you are instructed that the question of possible punishment of the defendants in the event of conviction is no concern of the jury, and should not in any sense enter into or influence your deliberations... you cannot allow a consideration of the punishment which may be inflicted upon the defendants to influence your verdict in any way."

Kaufman finished reading his charge at 4:46 p.m. The four alternate jurors, who had not been needed but who had attentively sat through the entire trial, were dismissed with thanks, and at 5:00 p.m. Kaufman said: "Very well, the jury will retire." They did not want to begin deliberations on an empty stomach, and went to an Italian restaurant off Foley Square for dinner. Around 6 p.m. they were led into a room behind the jury box that was bare except for an oblong table and twelve armchairs. In front of each chair, there was a pad, a pencil, and an ashtray. At 6:08 the jury began what would amount to a total of more than seven hours of deliberations.

It was up to the foreman, Vincent Lebonitte, the second-youngest juror, to conduct the deliberations and keep by having... discussed... "Is there anyone who would like say something on any point of testimony or on any thoughts he may have had? Let's get the ball rolling."

Someone suggested they should look at the indictment and the list of witnesses again to refresh their memories. Jurors are not allowed to take notes, and in a trial which involved complicated technical data, they were expected to perform feats of memory. At 6:40 the indictment and the list of witnesses were brought in.

The jurors reviewed some of the points that had impressed them. Morton Sobell had not testified in his own defense. He had taken the standard escape route for fleeing Soviet agents, via Mexico, where he had used seven aliases. This did not seem like the behavior of an innocent man. Julius Rosenberg had tried to appear candid, but had ruined that effect by hiding behind the Fifth Amendment. Certain moments in the trial had registered with the jurors as precisely as the pulse reactions in a lie-detector test. Such a moment was Rosenberg's account of a conversation with Greenglass in which he said, as Vincent Lebonitte recalls it, "What are you trying to do, David, threaten me and blackmail me?" Blackmail him for what, several jurors wondered?

Most jurors, like Charles Christie, voted guilty from the first ballot. "I voted guilty on the first vote and every vote that we had," he told the NPACT team.

The jurors wrote their verdicts on slips of paper, and passed the folded slips to Vincent Lebonitte, who took the count. On the first vote, he recalled, "one, possibly two, did not vote for guilty."

At 8:10 p.m., one juror asked to hear Ruth Greenglass' testimony starting with Julius Rosenberg's first approach. This was some of the most damning testimony in the trial: Julius wanted Ruth to tell David that he should collect information to pass on to the Russians. Ruth had taken $150 from Julius for expenses and gone to Albuquerque to be with David on their wedding anniversary, November 29, 1944. She had told David about Julius' proposal and he had agreed to supply the information.

The jury came back into the jury box, and the Rosenbergs and Sobell were taken up, handcuffed, to the courtroom. The court reporter read the ten pages of testimony. Bloch asked that the cross-examination also be read. "Your request is denied," Judge Kaufman said. "That has not been requested by the jury. The jury will retire. We will give the jury exactly what they request."

The jury resumed its deliberations, and at 9:42 asked to see the exhibits, to take another look at Greenglass' sketches of the bomb.

More votes were taken. One juror held out against a guilty verdict for Ethel Rosenberg. The issue, Vincent Lebonitte remembers, was not guilt vidual," he said, "was squandering about the possibility of a woman being put to death. He was under the impression that it was almost a foregone conclusion that she would suffer the loss of her life. He also brought out the mother angle. It was not a dissent on the evidence, it was a dissent for sentimental reasons. The idea that a mother with two children could be put to death was revolting to him."

The "individual" was James A. Gibbons, the accountant for the bus company. "I believed they [the Rosenbergs] were guilty then, and I believe it now," he recalled. "But there were two children, and I had two of my own. I just couldn't... two of the three, that wasn't on my mind, but the mother of two children..."

"From the start," confirmed Charles Duda, "there was no question of guilt or innocence, but one man was really hung up because of the children."

Other jurors with growing children did not feel the qualms that James Gibbons felt. "I had two daughters at that time," Charles Christie said, "and it bothered me how they would subject their children to such a thing. I just couldn't understand it." The only mother on the jury, Mrs. Lisette Dammas, "did not share the clemency view at all," Vincent Lebonitte remembers.

Several jurors, including Vincent Lebonitte, argued with Gibbons that there was only a slight chance that the death sentence would be imposed, so why have a verdict on such a remote possibility? "There was a lot of talk about executions," Gibbons recalls. Gibbons continued to insist on leniency for Ethel Rosenberg.

Aside from the one holdout, there was a strong feeling among the jurors that it would not have been proper to return a verdict too quickly. They hunted for doubts. "We wanted to see if we could come up with something on both sides of the ledger," Vincent Lebonitte recalls. "We were embarrassed to come in with a verdict too fast, so we bent over backward to examine different parts of the trial."

At 10:55 p.m., Vincent Lebonitte drafted the following communication for the court: "Judge Kaufman: One of the jurors has some doubt in his mind as to whether he can recommend leniency for one of the defendants. He is interested in knowing your mind on the matter."

"I might say," Kaufman said, "that I am not proposed as yet to give the answer. I want to give some thought to it. Do you gentlemen have any thoughts on the matter?"

Alexander Bloch: "I can't very well suggest anything. It is all up to you, Judge."

Court: "Yes."

A. Bloch: "Because ultimately you will be the one who will pass on it."

Court: "My present inclination is to just send back to them that portion of my charge which dealt with punishment. I have sent my clerk to look up cases on that subject."

At 11 p.m. the jurors returned to the punishment was not their concern. But he added: "If you wanted to make a recommendation, you can if you so desire, but I believe it should be stated to the jury that the recommendation should not in any way affect your decision... it is my prerogative to follow or disregard any recommendation that you may make on the matter of punishment. Is that clear?"

Again the jury was locked in and went about its business, dispassionately. "I've been on a lot of juries," Harold Axley recalls, "and I've seen some real shindigs, almost to blows, but this jury did not go on any emotional tangents. I can't even remember any real loud voices. There was no personal animosity, and no one person dominated."

To Vincent Lebonitte, Judge Kaufman's message meant that "we should come in with guilty or not guilty and it was within the judge's realm to determine clemency. The sentence had nothing to do with us. Our only responsibility was to determine guilt."

James Gibbons continued to hold out. "I'm no hero," he says today. "It was the thought of those two small children."

By midnight, after six hours of deliberation, no verdict had been reached. At 12:10 a.m. on March 29 the court summoned the jurors and said: "Madam and gentlemen of the jury... If you feel that you believe a verdict can be reached in a reasonable period of time, why then, I think it would probably be a good idea to continue your deliberations. Otherwise I will have to advise the marshal that I will consider locking you up for the evening."

The jury retired, and Harold Axley remembers saying: "Let's go to the hotel and think this thing out. We've had a long hard day of deliberations." The other jurors agreed. Again, Vincent Lebonitte drafted a message for Judge Kaufman: "Will you kindly make arrangements as you suggested from the bench due to still existent dissident vote amongst us?"

Kaufman, after some discussion with the defense lawyers over the advisability of obtaining an immediate verdict for at least one of the defendants, gave the order to find a hotel where the jurors could spend the night. They were taken to the Knickerbocker Hotel at 120 West Forty-fifth Street, the only hotel the marshals could find with twelve single rooms available on the same floor.

Howard Becker remembers that the Knickerbocker "wasn't a sleazebag, but it wasn't first-rate. I thought it could have been wrapped up that night but if I meant that much to him, well, one night's not going to make that much difference. By the time they'd made arrangements it was two a.m. At seven-thirty they banged on our door and we dressed and washed and had breakfast at Schnitz's."

"We were in court before ten. That morning we were all talking to him [Gibbons], explaining that it was not on his conscience, and that he thought they [the defendants] were guilty too."

"I remember anyone taking him into a corner and saying, 'Look, this is the only way out to be.'"

Vincent Lebonitte remembers that "I changed his [Gibbons'] slant on it. I told him: 'Look, possibly this woman that you want to save will someday be a part of a conspiracy to transmit secret information to a foreign power that would result in your own doom and the destruction of your wife and your children.' That changed his way of thinking."

Gibbons recalls that "I was made to understand that it wasn't the jury's job to even think about the sentence." It seldom happens that one juror can stand up to eleven others when they are locked in the same room, impatient to get out. It did not take long that morning for Gibbons to give in. He felt the relief that a man feels who has been defending an unpopular point of view against uneven odds. Now that it was over, he recalls, "I felt like Pontius Pilate washing his hands. If you know your Bible, you'll understand."

At 11:01 a.m. on March 29, 1951, after nearly eight hours of deliberations, the jury came in and declared the Rosenbergs and Morton Sobell guilty as charged. Bloch asked the court to poll the jury on each defendant. Perhaps the holdout would voice his reservations. Each of the jurors confirmed the announced verdict.

"I was looking right at them [the Rosenbergs] when the verdict was read," Charles Duda recalls. "I would have passed right out, but they did not react."

In thanking the jury, Kaufman revealed his own feelings. "My own opinion is that your verdict is a correct verdict," he said, "and what I was particularly pleased about was the time which you took to deliberate in this case. I must say that as an individual I cannot be happy because it is a sad day for America. The thought that citizens of our country would lend themselves to the destruction of their own country by the most destructive weapons known to man is so shocking that I can't find words to describe this long and some offense."

Synpol said it would not be seemly for the government to thank the jury, which had done its duty, then added: "You jurors may go now, for you disband and revert to your personal roles. I hope satisfied that our work continues."

Curiously, Bloch also thanked the jury: "I feel satisfied by reason of the length of time that you took for your deliberations, as well as the questions asked during the course of your deliberations; that you examined very carefully the evidence and came to a certain conclusion," he said. Later, when he was arguing on appeal that the Rosenbergs had not received a fair trial, these words would haunt him. How could he argue lack of fairness, if he was asked, when at the time he had thanked the judge and jury? Again, the thanks were part of his policy not tribute to Judge Kaufman's decision out the death sentence.

In his final words to the jury, Judge Kaufman was benign and final. "Now I say to the jurors, I almost feel as if I will miss seeing those faces morning after morning, but I know it has been a tremendous inconvenience to most of you. It has taken you away from your businesses."

The trial was not over. On April 5, Judge Kaufman sentenced the Rosenbergs to death. In words swollen with cold-war rhetoric, he said they had a direct responsibility for Communist aggression in Korea, "with the resultant casualties exceeding fifty thousand Americans and who knows but that millions more of innocent people may pay the price of your treason?" Blaming the Korean war on the Rosenbergs was like blaming a fire on a passerby who happens to be carrying matches. The stringency of Kaufman's remarks showed that he was even more sensitized to the political context of the case than was the jury.

The death sentence was not only disproportionate to the crime, it provided the basis for a violent anti-American campaign that raged for years all over the world. It was as a result of Kaufman's sentence that the Rosenbergs became martyrs in countries which knew next to nothing about their trial. The campaign was as immoderate as the sentence, as each cry for mercy became an assertion of innocence.

The trial was given unprecedented judicial scrutiny. There were twenty-five applications for relief, seven of them to the Supreme Court, which declined to review, and two applications to the President for executive clemency. The Rosenbergs were told that the death sentence would be commuted if they confessed. They did not confess, and they were executed on June 19, 1953. Six months later, on January 30, 1954, Emanuel Bloch, crushed by his failure to save the Rosenbergs and hounded by the threat of disbarment proceedings, died at the age of fifty-two, and his father, Alexander, died several years after him.

The jurors' reactions to the sentence were mixed. Charles Christie felt that "conspiracy and treason were the same thing. I feel about treason pretty much the same way I feel about murder, rape, kidnapping, which includes hijacking, and I think the maximum penalty should be imposed. I feel that way right today." Vincent Lebonitte was surprised. "I didn't think he [Kaufman] would be that severe. We had done an honest job, the penalty was no concern of ours. I never looked for death or blood. I would have accepted the life sentence, thirty years, twenty-five years. But anyone who says it was a trumped-up conviction—that makes me boil inside!" The jurors who had convinced James Gibbons that the chance of a death sentence was remote must have felt rather sheepish.

During the long period of appeals, friends and relatives of the Rosenbergs contacted jurors. "Rosenberg's brother

"He put his foot in the door. He wanted me to write a letter to the President," said, "there are eleven other jurors, weren't I said it was over, I didn't want anything more to do with it, and please to leave. He wouldn't take his foot from the door, I had to kick it away." Gibbons often thought about the woman he had tried to save. It had been the most difficult moral decision of his life, and he had given in to group pressure.

"After the trial, every now and then, my telephone would ring and it would be someone on one of these committees," Harold Axley recalls, "asking me to write someone—I can't even remember who at this point—and tell them the sentence was too harsh. I told them it would not have been proper to disagree with the sentence given out by the judge."

For years after the trial, Harold Axley had recurrent nightmares about the Rosenbergs. He saw himself back in the jury box, watching them, or talking to the other jurors, or going over the evidence in the jury room. "I don't attach any importance to it," he said. "I dream about my golf scores, too. Always the bad ones, not the good ones."

After their moment in the limelight, the jurors went back to their normal lives. With the possible exception of Gibbons, the experience did not mark them in any profound way. They were part of a process, and carried out their duties in good faith. None of those I talked to have ever nurtured doubts about the Rosenbergs' guilt. #

I took the money, recounted it carefully, and loudly, and pocketed the sum. Then I stepped over to the desk and prepared a receipt.

"Very efficient," Essen said.

"Yes, very," my aunt said.

I gave Essen his receipt, along with the key to the house, and was about to set forth the precise conditions of residence when my aunt spoke.

"Show Mr. Essen to the door, Nicholas, and see he is escorted safely to the house."

"That will not be necessary," Essen said. "I prefer to walk alone. Good day."

I gave Essen his coat and hat and accompanied him to the door.

"There are certain terms," I said.

"Of course, of course," Essen said and he hurried down the walk.

I returned to the parlor rather annoyed with my aunt. She had rented the house without a moment's inquiry and allowed a foolish, ill-dressed, retired teacher—fired for incompetence, for all we knew—to kiss her hand.

My aunt poured herself a cup of coffee and sipped, ignoring me. I stood in the archway between parlor and foyer

On 6/3/75, DAVID GREENGLASS contacted the NYO, and advised as follows:

He stated he had just read a review of the book "We Are Your Sons", by ROBERT and MICHAEL MEROPOL. This review was written by LEO BRADY, and appeared in the New York Times Book Review of 5/25/75.

GREENGLASS advised that he was upset concerning the following sentence which appears toward the end of the article: "The question of the Rosenbergs' guilt will, one hopes, be settled by suits now pending against the prosecution for subornation of perjury (of David Greenglass) and against the F.B.I. under the Freedom Of Information Act."

GREENGLASS was advised that the NYO had no knowledge of any pending subornation of perjury matter.

On 6/4/75, Chief Assistant USA, SDNY, THOMAS J. CAHILL, advised the NYO that no such case is presently pending.

The above is being furnished to the Bureau for information purposes.

City Bar Leaders Defend Rosenberg

By SHEILA MORAN

The president and past presidents of the city Bar Assn. have issued a statement expressing concern about "unfair criticism and attacks" against federal Judge Irving Kaufman, who presided at the controversial Rosenberg spy trial 24 years ago.

Citing the recent flurry of attacks against the trial and "particularly the trial judge," the statement said: "Judges cannot defend themselves and it is the duty of the bar to speak up when criticism exceeds bounds of fairness and becomes partisan or self-serving."

The current president of the city bar, Cyrus Vance, told a reporter, "At this point this is just a statement by individuals." He indicated that the association itself would take no further action.

Kaufman, who is now chief judge of the U. S. Second Circuit Court of Appeals, sentenced Julius and Ethel Rosenberg to death in 1951 after a jury found them guilty of transmitting atomic secrets to the Russians. He characterized their efforts for the Soviets as "worse than murder."

The Rosenbergs were incarcerated at Sing Sing Prison on June 19, 1953 after 18 appeals to the U. S. District Court, seven to the U. S. Supreme Court, and two appeals to President Eisenhower for clemency.

The Bar Assn. statement was signed by all the living presidents of the group, except for two who are disqualified, one as a federal judge and the other because he dealt with the case as Attorney General under President Eisenhower.

"It's time some of the senior members of the bar should speak out," said Whitney North Seymour, one of the eight who signed the statement.

Trial Judge

The statement said the attacks appear "on the air, in print and on picket signs which confront the judge at public dinners which he must attend." Vance also cited to a reporter a rally yesterday outside the U. S. Courthouse at Foley Square.

Sons Lead Rally

The rally was led by the Rosenbergs' sons, Robert and Michael Meeropol and drew about 60 demonstrators carrying picket signs.

The campaign to reopen the Rosenberg case escalated last year, when the couple's sons emerged from obscurity to try to clear the names of their parents, following the 1973 publication of "The Implosion Conspiracy," a best-selling book about the trial by Louis Nizer. The sons subsequently sued Nizer, a well-known lawyer, for defamation and invasion of privacy, but the suit was dismissed.

Last month, Robert Meeropol, 27, and Michael, 32, who use the name of their adoptive parents, came out with a book of their own, entitled "We Are Your Sons," Cold War Plot?

They have said that Watergate revelations of high-level conspiracies, coverups and perjury in the name of national security have lent new credence to their long-held contention that their parents were the victims of a government frame-up to feed anti-Communist sentiment during the Cold War.

In March of 1974, a national committee was formed to reopen the case. A fund-raising rally at Carnegie Hall, sponsored by the committee, drew 2500 supporters.

The keynote speaker was Emmy Altman, a Rutgers University sociologist, who charged there was evidence in government files that would show that the case had been manufactured by the Justice Dept. with the cooperation of perjured witnesses.

The Rosenberg sons leveled similar charges at yesterday's rally in front of the courthouse where their parents were convicted. Using megaphones to attract lunch-hour strollers around the downtown court complex.

Last February they filed a request with the Justice Dept. under the new Freedom of Information Act, seeking to obtain FBI files on the case, including statements made by government witnesses to the FBI before the trial. They claimed that the Justice Dept. has refused their request on the grounds that it would invade the privacy of the witnesses.

Yesterday, they said they would file suit in Washington this month to obtain the documents.

Kaufmann, 65, who celebrated his 25th year on the federal bench last November, has remained silent about the Rosenberg case, but people who know him say he bristles when the topic is mentioned.

In a magazine article on First Amendment rights published earlier this month, Kaufmann wrote that he had planned to deliver the piece as a commencement address at Penna College in 1974.

Rosenbergs' Sons Will Be Given Access to Files on Their Parents

The Washington Star

WASHINGTON, July 10— Even under the policy adopted Mr. Levi, item-by-item decisions will have to be made on what material to release and what to withhold because its release might harm other persons, reveal investigative techniques or endanger national security.

The bureau is still very much opposed to the release of information that might give away its informants or its methods of operation—even if the information is years old.

The Rosenbergs were executed on June 19, 1953, after their conviction for passing atomic secrets to the Soviet Union.

Their sons, Michael and Robert Meeropol, who use the name of the family that adopted them after the execution of their parents, filed a sweeping request for information about the case last February under new amendments to the Freedom of Information Law.

Both the F.B.I. director, Clarence M. Kelley, and United States Attorney, Frank Curran, agreed to limited parts of the sons' requests but turned them down on access to large portions of the files. The Meeropols appealed those decisions to Mr. Levi.

In two letters, made public today, Mr. Levi and his deputy, Harold R. Tyler Jr., have told the Meeropols, through their attorney, Marshall Perlin of New York, that the department would take a liberal attitude in deciding what should be made available to them and that the files would be opened as rapidly as possible.

The two brothers believe that their parents were innocent and that the information in the government files will prove that the case against them was a "fraud."

FBI Cites Security on Hiss, Rosenberg Files

TIMOTHY S. ROBINSON

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The FBI's disclosure of certain information in its 30-year-old files on Alger Hiss and Julius and Ethel Rosenberg would identify "an extremely sensitive source who presently continues to furnish highly valuable information of a counterespionage nature."

An FBI official, Thomas Henry Bresson, made that argument in an affidavit filed in U. S. District Court here last week in a suit in which a historian is seeking access to the FBI files on those persons.

The affidavit is the most detailed explanation filed by the FBI on its reasons for refusing to release files on cases that have long been dormant.

Bresson argued that "national security" would be harmed by the release of the files and raised the possibility that release could harm numerous third parties.

The Rosenbergs were executed after their conviction in 1953 on charges of giving

U.S. atomic secrets to the Russians and their case has continued to be controversial.

Hiss was convicted in 1950 of perjury after denying he gave state secrets to Communist spies. Still claiming he is innocent, Hiss is also seeking access to his own FBI files and was recently granted access to certain portions of the files.

Bresson, a supervisory agent in the FBI's Freedom of Information Act section that handles such requests, said the release of information which people furnished to the FBI in confidence "would create a breach of the public trust invested in the FBI."

The release "would have an inhibiting effect on our present and future ability to investigate and enforce the laws of the U.S.," Bresson said, adding that in some instances investigations would be "impossible. If the FBI cannot assure those who furnish us information that their identities will be kept confidential—permanently confidential—and not simply for five years, or ten years, or 20 years, or until a FOIA request is made."

In 1973 Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson authorized the release of certain information from FBI files in cases more than 15 years old, subject to a review of them by FBI personnel.

Bresson said in his affidavit that in the first half of this year the FBI had received 4831 FOIA requests, representing nearly one million pages of material to be processed, and that 100 persons have been assigned to the handling of requests.

He said the purpose of the unit is to balance the needs of privacy and national security against the "legitimate right of public access" to the materials, and that two persons are working fulltime on requests by Smith College historian Allen Weinstein for the Hiss and Rosenberg files. Weinstein's suit concerning access to the materials is pending before U. S. District Judge William B. Jones.

Bresson said that "release of this material could disclose our information gathering capabilities during that time frame (30 years ago); could disclose our degree of expertise in certain technical areas which, coupled with presently available knowledge, could lead to a disclosure of our current degree of expertise; and also could have a very detrimental effect on the foreign relations of the U. S."

Bresson also said the FBI had received "urgent requests" from persons involved in both the Hiss and Rosenberg cases "stating that under no circumstances do they want their identities or information concerning them released by the FBI."

Rosenbergs' Sons Sue For U.S. Files

WASHINGTON — Declaring they are "firmly convinced of the innocence" of their executed parents, the sons of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg have filed suit in an attempt to bare all the government's files on the celebrated espionage case.

Robert and Michael Meeropol asked the U.S. District Court yesterday to order the handover of all such records from the FBI, the CIA, the Energy Resources Development Administration, the Dept. of Justice and U.S. Attorneys' offices.

Last month, the Justice Dept. announced it had ordered the FBI to turn over to the Rosenbergs' sons as much as possible from an estimated 48,000 pages of files relating to the case.

But the two Meeropols, who now go by name of the family that adopted them, told reporters outside the courthouse yesterday that they had witnessed only "government foot-dragging" on the matter.

The brothers claim their parents were victims of the government's lust for a political victory at a time of anti-Communist frenzy but the verdict stood up through an assortment of appeals by which more than 100 judges upheld the fairness of their trial in New York before Federal Judge Irving R. Kaufman.

OUT OF THE PAST

Attorney General Edward Levi has begun the process of reversing the FBI's long resistance to the opening of its archives in the Hiss and Rosenberg cases. While some legal controversy over the dimensions of disclosure may ensue, the split of Levi's move is a long, wise step forward.

I write this as one who was journalistically present during the unfolding of both dramas and who has never accepted the simplistic revisionist mythology that has grown up around these cases. Nothing I have read or heard has persuaded me that Alger Hiss or the Rosenbergs were innocent victims of diabolical cold war "frameups."

But I believe the interests of both justice and history will be served by maximum release of relevant documents, regardless of whose preconceptions are fortified by the material. Prolonged suppression over many long years has nourished doubts and conspiracy theories, even obscuring elementary facts that are matters of record.

Full disclosure may not resolve all ambiguities or uncertainties, especially among those who have acquired deep emotional investments in vindicating the defendants. But it should at least shift the debate from preoccupation with the claim that the government has desperately engaged in cover-up.

In fact this issue has made it increasingly difficult to stimulate any dispassionate differentiation between the record of the trial and the rhetoric of the subsequent years. Many Americans who were infants at the time of the verdicts have not yet read a paragraph of the testimony in either case, even while condemning the alleged infamy of the convictions.

This is not to say no real questions have been raised about the detailed conduct of the prosecutions. Neither would any evidence belatedly released in behalf of the government modify my personal opposition on general principle to the use of capital punishment.

But by now most of the public controversy is far removed from any relationship to the actual proceedings or the setting in which they took place.

Thus, when Alger Hiss recently sought readmission to the Massachusetts bar, the worthy contention that he had long ago "earned re-entry" was absurdly distorted by an attempt to portray him as a "victim of McCarthyism." The argument has been echoed by others not around when these happenings occurred.

The truth, of course, is that the Chambers-Hill confrontation took place before Joe McCarthy began his unholy war against free institutions, and Hiss' ultimate conviction became one of McCarthy's retroactive weapons.

Similarly, it is now widely forgotten that during most of the Rosenbergs' case—until the death penalty became an imminent reality—their case was systematically ignored by the U. S. Communist organ, then known as the Daily Worker.

Some time ago I asked John Gates, who had been editor of The Worker at the time and left the Communist ranks after the crushing of the Hungarian rebellion, whether he recalled that long silence and how he explained it.

"We didn't need any orders," he said. "It was understood that we didn't get involved in espionage cases."

He was not professing any personal knowledge of guilt. But he was suggesting awareness in high Communist echelons that the Rosenbergs had been something more than progressive Dodger fans.

(The most striking background volume on the Rosenbergs is E. L. Doctorow's "Book of Daniel," a roman a clef that renders no dogmatic legal judgments but offers dramatic insight into the Communist world the Rosenbergs inhabited.)

Much of the factual chronicle of the Hiss story is reviewed in the current Commentary by Irving Younger, a respected Cornell law professor and former judge. Drawn almost entirely from transcripts (of the trials and the Congressional hearings), his essay is a well-documented, sober reminder—which will come as a revelation to late arrivals—that the cumulative evidence against Hiss was substantially more concrete and conclusive than the initial verbal recitals of Whittaker Chambers.

Partisans of Hiss may ask why, if he was guilty, he has clung so steadfastly to his claim of innocence, and it would be presumptuous to proclaim an easy answer. Obviously one explanation is a sense of loyalty to those who initially rallied to him. Another is that somewhere along the road he was the victim of legal malpractice and has subjectively come to envisage himself as a wronged man. But mysteries of motivation defy glib comment.

What matters at this moment is that the new Attorney General has apparently challenged the FBI's attempt to keep the files sealed on the grounds, among other things, that disclosure could identify "an extremely sensitive source who presently continues to supply highly valuable material of a counterespionage nature." The FBI's responsibility to those providing current information in confidence can present troublesome problems. But after nearly 30 years? Surely so venerable a super-source has earned retirement.

The below listed reports are located in the second drawer from the top in the steel cabinet numbered Department of Justice 51128. The top drawer of this cabinet contains motions relative to the ROSENBERG case number 114868. There are some FBI reports interspersed with the legal papers but these have been used to substantiate the government's case in various appeals and it is not felt that they can be separated without the direction of the USA.

Drawer #3 contains nine books of Grand Jury minutes in black bound folders as well as a looseleaf volume in green indicating a chronological and alphabetical order of the witnesses who appeared at the Grand Jury. This drawer also contains a looseleaf folder indicating on the outside a digest of the testimony of the JULIUS ROSENBERG case. This has been broken down into approximately 160 pages of a recording of both direct examination and cross-examination of the witnesses who appeared at the trial.

The fourth drawer contains one brown manila envelope with cancelled checks which were issued to MORTON SOBELL from Reeves Instrument Company. Otherwise, the drawer is empty.

The fifth drawer of this cabinet contains 15 bound black books relative to Grand Jury testimony from 1949 through 1953.

Cabinet number 51129 contains, the first drawer being the top drawer, legal papers relative to the ROSENBERG case and a blue bound looseleaf notebook containing a digest of the testimony of the JULIUS ROSENBERG case.

The second drawer contains legal documents as well as the various exhibits still remaining in the USA's Office relative to the trial itself.

Drawer #3 contains folders A through O broken down into various witnesses' statements as well as testimony of witnesses who appeared at the trial as well as documents which were used for their cross-examination. For example, personnel file of Navy Department of MAX ELITCHER.

Drawer 4 contains the same type of breakdown starting at P and ending at W. The latter portion of the drawer contains Grand Jury minutes. This drawer also contains a Chevron map of the City of Albuquerque.

Drawer 5 contains various legal papers of the USA'S office including charge outs relative to the various appeals in this particular trial. However, the majority of this material is legal papers of the USA's Office, SDNY relative to the trial and the appeals.

On 2/21/51, a letter to the Honorable IRVING A. SAYPOL, USA, was directed from SAC EDWARD SCHEIDT. This letter states as follows:

On 7/29/75, SA [redacted] of the NYO with the assistance of a NYO secretary reviewed the material contained in the cabinets in the vault in the USA's Office at 1 St. Andrews Plaza, NY, NY.

Enclosed herewith for the Bureau and for dissemination to the Department are 3 copies of a listing of the material that was reviewed by the NYO. It was pointed out to Mr. THOMAS J. CAHILL, Chief Assistant USA, SDNY that the Bureau could only be responsible for a review of the material which was of priority concern to the FBI. A review of these cabinets and their contents concerning the ROSENBERG case was made and are synopsized as to their contents. However, none of these materials were disturbed, some of which contain Bureau reports which were undoubtedly used in legal proceedings concerning the numerous appeals and motions in this case.

Feds to Bare Rosenberg & Hiss Records

(Moun

Washington, Aug. 16 (UPI) — The Justice Department announced today that it has decided to make public soon "as much information as possible" in the spy cases involving Alger Hiss and Julius and Ethel Rosenberg.

Deputy Attorney General Harold R. Tyler Jr. said information being sought in the two cases by attorneys for Hiss and the two sons of the Rosenbergs would be released "in the near future" in keeping with the Freedom of Information Act's provisions.

The announcement represented a major breakthrough for Hiss, who has been seeking to prove himself innocent of his perjury conviction for denying that he turned over government secrets to the Communists. The two sons of the Rosenbergs also are seeking to reopen the case in which their parents were convicted on spy charges and executed.

Tyler said the papers should be released and that he was confident they would show that the rights of those involved were upheld.

"Public examination of these records will demonstrate beyond reasonable doubt the integrity of the investigative, prosecutorial and judicial processes as they were carried out in these cases," he said.

Authorized by Attorney General Edward Levi to make all final decisions on freedom of information matters, Tyler said he advised departmental personnel that exemptions in the act were to be invoked in the Hiss and Rosenberg cases "only if there is a compelling reason to do so."

Cited Reasons

"For instance, a record may be withheld if it is 'properly classified and cannot be classified or modified in some way to make it appropriate for release,'" Tyler said in a statement. "Other compelling reasons for nondisclosure include substantial threats to the usefulness or safety of a past or present informant, or to an individual's right to privacy."

Tyler said: "Those involved in the criminal conduct in the spy cases, as well as the principal witnesses, have no general privacy interest in the subject matter sufficient to justify the withholding of any of these records."

Deadline for Rosenberg Files

By TOM RAUM

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department is under court order to speed up disclosure of prosecution records sought by the sons of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg in an effort to clear the name of their executed parents.

The records, comprising an estimated 50,000 documents, are being sought in a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit filed by Robert and Michael Meeropol, the Rosenberg sons who now go by the name of the family that adopted them.

U.S. District Court Judge June Green told government lawyers yesterday they have until Nov. 15 to produce most of the documents from the celebrated spy case.

She said she would then review with government attorneys those documents that haven't been released to determine whether they should be withheld for national security or any other reasons.

"I want to have a decision by the end of the year," she said. "I don't think that's an unreasonable request."

The Justice Department had sought a six-to-eight-month extension. Government attorney Jeffrey Axelrad told Judge Green the timetable she ordered would be nearly impossible to comply with.

Axelrad said the Rosenberg files involved tens of thousands of documents in half-a-dozen different federal agencies and that it would take months to sift through them to determine what can be released.

Robert Meeropol, 28, told reporters after the hearing that the judge's order was "a small but important step forward."

He and his 32-year-old brother have said they are convinced the documents they are seeking will exonerate their parents and prove that "every major prosecution witness committed perjury in one form or another."

The Meeropols accuse the government of dragging its feet in processing their request.

"They're stalling because they have something to hide," Robert Meeropol asserted.

The Rosenbergs were convicted in 1951 of being part of a spy-ring that allegedly passed secrets on the atomic bomb to the Soviet Union. They were executed June 19, 1953, maintaining their innocence to the end.

Judge Green also ordered the Justice Department to produce by Oct. 1 an index of all major Rosenberg documents it possesses, which ones it intends to release and which it wants to withhold. She also said a second index of indirect documents relating to the Rosenberg case must be submitted by Oct. 21.

The Meeropols' suit also seeks an injunction barring any further destruction of materials in the case. It cited the recent disclosure that the U.S. Attorney in New Mexico had destroyed records involving David Greenglass, a key government witness in the case.

Judge Green said she was ordering production of an index to documents in the case by Oct. 1 to guard against the possibility of other documents being destroyed.

ROSENBERG DATA RELEASED BY F.B.I.

History Professor Is Given Part of Files Along With Hiss Case Documents

By LINDA CHARLTON

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 29—The Federal Bureau of Investigation has released to a professor of history at Smith College the first of its secret material on the espionage investigation of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg, a 725-page portion of the bureau's 48,000-page file.

The professor, Allen Weinstein, who petitioned the agency for the material three years ago and later filed suit under the Freedom of Information Act, said that the bulk of the material he received yesterday was "very substantive."

Mr. Weinstein was also given 350 pages of the agency's investigation of Alger Hiss, about whose case he is completing a book.

He said in a telephone interview that he was "encouraged" by receiving the material and hoped that it indicated the speedy release of the rest of the file.

For Passing Secrets

Deputy Attorney General Harold R. Tyler has pressed for "maximum possible disclosure" as quickly as possible and a Federal Court has ordered disclosure of most documents by Nov. 15.

The Rosenbergs were executed in June, 1953, after having been convicted of conspiracy to commit espionage by passing atomic-bomb secrets to Soviet agents.

Mr. Hiss was convicted of perjury in 1950 for denying to a grand jury in 1948 that he had turned over State Department documents to Whittaker Chambers, an avowed Communist courier.

The Rosenberg documents delivered to Mr. Weinstein will also be sent to Robert and Michael Meeropol, their sons, who have also filed a Freedom of Information suit to obtain all the Government's files on their parents' case.

The documents that Mr. Weinstein got include, he said, summaries of F.B.I. interviews and correspondence between David Greenglass, Mrs. Rosenberg's brother and the principal prosecution witness at their trial, and his wife.

It also includes a sworn statement from Mr. Rosenberg given to the F.B.I. in 1941, when he was investigated for alleged Communist sympathies, as follows:

To Set Example

"I asked my wife about her signing a Communist party petition. Her memory on the matter is not entirely clear, but she told me that a man who she did not know came to the door one day. He said he lived in the neighborhood and gave her a long ramble, all of the effect as to whether she wanted all sides of a question represented. She said that she guessed that she did. He said, 'Then sign this.' She asked what it was and he said it would put the Communist party on the ballot. She asked, 'Will this make me a Communist if I sign?' He said 'no,' so she signed. I guess it was carelessness on her part or maybe she just lacked sales resistance. However, I know she was no Communist."

In a letter to her husband written in May, 1943, Mr. Weinstein said, Ruth Greenglass urged him to "remember what Julie told you, as a Communist it's up to you to set an example to the other soldiers. . . . David Greenglass was a technician at the Los Alamos, N.M., atom-bomb plant."

The transcript of an F.B.I. interview with Julius Rosenberg in 1950, after Mr. Greenglass's arrest but before the Rosenbergs were taken into custody in July of that year, noted that he denied any espionage or that he had collected any material from his brother-in-law. It added:

"Around the end of July or August 1944 Rosenberg stated that he knew that David was at Los Alamos working on a secret project. . . . Rosenberg claimed he did not know it was the atom bomb until the first atom bomb dropped on Hiroshima."

Asked Questions

There is also, Mr. Weinstein said, the summary of an F.B.I. interview with Mr. Greenglass in which he said that he did not want to testify against the Rosenbergs, as he ultimately did. He served 9½ years of a 15-year prison term and was paroled in 1960; he had told the court that in January, 1945, Mr. Rosenberg had asked him for — and obtained — information on the bomb.

Another document is an F.B.I. report of a meeting that Mr. Greenglass said took place in New York when he was on furlough from Los Alamos. He said that Mr. Rosenberg and a man whose name he could not recall came over to his parked car.

"The man got into the car and I drove on while the man asked me questions about a high explosive lens which was being experimented with at the Los Alamos atom bomb project," according to Mr. Greenglass's statement. "I tried to describe the lens to the man while I was driving."

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Memorandum

TO : SAC (65-15348)

FROM : SA [REDACTED] (#38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG;
ET AL
ESP-R

DATE: 9/25/75

At 2:55 p.m., 9/25/75, in response to a call from Supv. THOMAS BRESSON, ext. 4648, at FBIHQ I telephonically contacted Supv. BRESSON who is the Unit Chief, Projects Division, Division IV, FBIHQ.

Mr. BRESSON desired to discuss the airtel in this matter dated 7/30/75 in view of an inquiry he received from the Department of Justice relative to whether all of the Bureau material that was in possession of the USA's Office, SDNY, had been examined by the Bureau.

Mr. BRESSON was informed that as set forth in the enclosure to this airtel, the cabinets relative to the ROSENBERG case were the cabinets that were designated as containing ROSENBERG material and no attempt was made to review or peruse cabinets which were not so designated. Mr. BRESSON was informed that this safe contained records of other prosecutions similar to the ROSENBERG prosecution. The examination was confined to those cabinets which were designated by the USA's Office as having ROSENBERG material. Mr. BRESSON was informed that as stated in the airtel no attempt was made to review any other files other than those so designated as ROSENBERG material and the airtel stands as being correct as to the review conducted by the writer. Mr. BRESSON was informed that if any further discussions were necessary relative to any sensitive matters concerning this case it would be better that these discussions were heard over the secure phone. Mr. BRESSON stated that he did not think that he needed any further information at this time but would contact the writer if he did.

SAC ROBERT C. DENZ, Division III has been informed of the above.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Memorandum

TO : SAC (65-15348)

DATE: OCT 2 1975

FROM : SA [REDACTED] (#38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESP - R

ReNYairtel, dated 9/26/75.

On that date, Mr. THOMAS J. CAHILL, Chief Assistant, United States Attorney, Southern District of New York (SDNY), was hand carried a revised copy of the inventory that had been previously supplied to the United States Attorney on 7/30/75.

On that date, Mr. CAHILL introduced the writer and worked with a Mr. WILLIAM KELLEHER, who is an assistant handling the Freedom of Information Act affidavits for the SDNY.

The material that was reviewed by the New York Office relative to those reports concerning the ROSENBERG case were again pointed out to Mr. KELLEHER, who has now had these cabinets moved to his office, that is cabinets 51128 and 51129.

Mr. KELLEHER advised that he was further deleting for his purposes and the purposes of the SDNY, any indication other than the date and the author of the FBI report and its place of reference to any classification or the title thereof of the reports involved were not going to be used by Mr. KELLEHER in his inventory relative to the subpoena that had been furnished to the Department of Justice, the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the United States Attorney's Office, SDNY.

Mr. KELLEHER pointed out that in a Sub-Title A of the letter to the office of the Attorney General, dated 2/20/75, from the ROSENBERG's son, reference was made to ABRAHAM BROTHMAN and also OSCAR JOHN VAGO. Mr. KELLEHER was advised that the writer was not completely familiar with these matters, but thought that there were separate cases involving the United States Attorney's Office, SDNY, and these individuals. The writer informed Mr. KELLEHER that research would be made and he would be so informed.

so that he could properly understand the situation and the involvement of these individuals relative to the ROSENBERG case.

The writer, on 9/27/75, indicated that CAHILL contacted Assistant United States Attorney KELLEHER and advised him that there were two separate proceedings relative to both ABRAHAM BROTHMAN and OSCAR JOHN VAGO. There were two counts relative to ABRAHAM BROTHMAN, which were tried in the SDNY, of which BROTHMAN was convicted on two counts in November, 1950, to conspiracy to obstruct justice and intimidation of a government witness. BROTHMAN initially was convicted on both counts and sentenced to five years on the first count and two years on the second count. The United States Court of Appeals upheld the obstruction of justice, but vacated the intimidation of a government witness count, and BROTHMAN was confined to the custody of the Attorney General, 8/21/51.

It was also pointed out to Mr. KELLEHER, that on 9/28/50, OSCAR JOHN VAGO was arrested by Agents of the FBI on 9/28/50, for violation of Title 18, Section 1621, United States Code (Perjury). He was found guilty on 6/20/52 and sentenced to three years suspended sentence and probation. On that date, the New York file relative to ABRAHAM BROTHMAN is 100-95068; the file relative to OSCAR JOHN VAGO 100-55242. copies of this memorandum should be furnished to these files.

Mr. KELLEHER was informed that it was impossible to ascertain the exact relevancy relative to the request by the ROSENBERG's sons in connection with papers relative to the BROTHMAN and VAGO proceedings, but both of these proceedings were separate and distinct from the ROSENBERG trial.

The information relative to this matter was as stated above, telephonically furnished to Mr. KELLEHER on 9/27/75. Mr. KELLEHER stated that it was doubtful that he would be able to complete his affidavit for appearance in Washington, on 9/29/75, and thought that it probably would have to be put over as the SDNY could not comply with the request made by the Justice Department in such a short period of time.

TO : SAC (65-15348)

DATE:

OCT. 16 1975

FROM : SA [REDACTED] (#38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESP - R

On 10/13/75, Mr. WILLIAM KELLEHER, United States Attorney's Office, Southern District of New York (SDNY), telephonically contacted the writer, relative to a name that had appeared in their files, that is the United States Attorney's files, relative to a document that was possibly pertinent to the court, to furnish these documents under the Freedom of Information Act, to the ROSENBERG's sons.

Mr. KELLEHER advised that the name was that of BENJAMIN C. BRADLEE, and he indicated that there was information relative to a memorandum from the then Assistant Attorney General JOHN V. LINSEY, who had mentioned in the memorandum some details relative to BRADLEE being then concerned with the publicity over the ROSENBERG case in France.

The files of the New York Office indicated that there is no reference to BENJAMIN C. BRADLEE relative to the ROSENBERG case; however, it appeared that BRADLEE was identical with the managing editor of the Washington Post.

Mr. KELLEHER was advised along with Chief Assistant United States Attorney THOMAS J. CAHILL, SDNY, that in view of the fact that this document apparently referred to information that was furnished to the Department of Justice, rather than the FBI, and therefore, the New York Office had no record of this information.

Also on 10/13/75, Mr. CAHILL telephonically contacted the writer relative to an exclusion that had been made in the report at the New York Office of JOHN W. LEWIS, dated 7/22/50, entitled "JULIUS ROSENBERG; ESP - R". Mr. CAHILL was concerned relative to exclusions that existed in their report from the latter paragraph of Page 13 to the first paragraph of Page 14.

Mr. CAHILL advised that there were notations in his report, indicating that these had been excluded on 2/19/51, at the instructions of the then United States Attorney, SDNY, IRVING R. SAYPOL. On this date, 10/13/75, a review of this particular report was made at the New York Office by the writer, which indicated that the paragraphs removed, that is the last paragraph, Page 14 and the top paragraph on Page 14, start with "The atom bomb is made up of" and ends on Page 14 in the following words "results in an atomic explosion".

Mr. CAHILL was telephonically advised that the information that was excluded was relative to the makeup of the atomic bomb, and were probably excluded by Mr. SAYPOL, at the request of either the Department of Justice or the Atomic Energy Commission.

The exact reasoning for their exclusion would of course have to come from Mr. SAYPOL himself, or possibly from the Department of Justice or from FBIHQ.

On 10/9/75, Chief Assistant THOMAS J. CAHILL, Southern District of New York (SDNY), United States Attorney's Office, telephonically requested to consult with the writer relative to information they had located in their files concerning one, JEROME EUGENE TARTAKOW. Mr. CAHILL advised that the presence of TARTAKOW and the information that TARTAKOW had furnished to the Bureau had been previously unknown to his office.

In view of the request made by the United States Attorney, an attempt was made to speak to Supervisor JAMES P. LEE, FBIHQ, relative to the FBIHQ's policy concerning this matter. Supervisor JAMES JOHNSON of the Bureau was advised that a conference would be held with Mr. CAHILL relative to the aforementioned event without committing the Bureau to any particular policy until further facts were ascertained.

The facts were ascertained concerning this matter and a conference was held with Chief Assistant THOMAS J. CAHILL, AUSA, SDNY, and Mr. WILLIAM KELLEHER of the United States Attorney's Office, SDNY. They informed the writer that a letter which would be part of the inventory to be furnished relative to the court action concerning the ROSENBERG case, had come to their attention. This letter was dated 4/17/51, and had been dictated to the file and was presently a part of the material to be turned over. This indicated the cooperation that JEROME EUGENE TARTAKOW had been of material assistance in connection with the ROSENBERG case, and it also reflected that Mr. IRVING SAYPOL, the United States Attorney at that time, had recorded the conversation he had had with Departmental Representative Mr. L. CAUDLE and the Attorney General. It was indicated in the letter that further discussions they had relative to TARTAKOW's possible parole relative to any assistance he might have been to the Bureau relative to this case. This information was based on information orally supplied to Mr. SAYPOL relative to TARTAKOW's cooperation with the FBI concerning the conversations he had had with the subject of the investigation, JULIUS ROSENBERG.

Mr. CAHILL pointed out in discussion, that it was clear from the information furnished, that the informant relative to the case and in the report of WILLIAM F. NORTON, JR., made at New York on 3/16/51, entitled "JULIUS ROSENBERG; ETHEL ROSENBERG; MORTON SOBELL; ESP -R", contained the information that was supplied by JEROME EUGENE TARTAKOW. Mr. CAHILL pointed out that if the memorandum was furnished as a part of the inventory requested by the court, it would be clear that the informant, who is not named in the report of SA WILLIAM F. NORTON, JR., dated 3/16/51, was undoubtedly JEROME EUGENE TARTAKOW.

Mr. CAHILL stated that he had no desire to disclose, and knew nothing concerning the existence of TARTAKOW, prior to the review of the files to comply with court orders in relation to the ROSENBERG request of files by their son in this matter. Mr. CAHILL stated that he wanted to apprise the New York Office of this situation and desired to know if TARTAKOW was still alive and if any possible damage could be incurred to the Bureau in any ongoing operation, and if TARTAKOW was continuing to be used as a source of the New York Office or the Bureau in relation to Soviet espionage work.

Mr. CAHILL also stated that his office had a record which was part of the Department of Justice files and not the part of the United States Attorney's files, relative to the sentencing of HARRY GOLD, wherein it stated, that GOLD's attorney, Mr. HAMILTON, had indicated to the sentencing judge, that actually the papers had indicated that FUCKS had identified HARRY GOLD, wherein reality, the United States Government knew that it was GOLD who had identified EMIL KLAUS FUCKS.

Mr. CAHILL stated that this particular document was stamped "Confidential" and would be returned to the Department of Justice, indicating that there was a possible consideration to be given to this document.

Mr. CAHILL was advised that FBIHQ would be contacted relative to his request and guidance concerning the above mentioned items. Mr. CAHILL was thanked for his consideration of FBI sources and the manner in which he was directing the review to carefully present and respond to the court procedures without disclosing any sensitive information relative to the national security of the United States.

On 10/10/75, this matter was telephonically brought to the attention of Supervisor JAMES P. LEE at the Bureau, in accordance with a conference held with SAC ROBERT DENZ relative to this matter and the resolution of it in the best interest of the Bureau.

Supervisor JAMES P. LEE, FBIHQ, advised that in relation to the TARTAKOW matter, the FBIHQ and the Department of Justice had decided that the TARTAKOW matter was to be treated under the Freedom of Information Act situation as an ordinary informant, and his name was to be deleted under the agreement that had been reached by FBIHQ and the department under the Freedom of Information Act.

Mr. LEE advised that particular difficulties that Mr. CAHILL, had could properly be resolved by the attorneys at the Department of Justice, who were preparing the legal arguments relative to this case and the government's presentation of documents. Mr. LEE advised that Mr. GERALD AXELROD and a Mr. LEVINE could be of assistance to Mr. CAHILL in matters concerning documents that were strictly the property of the United States Attorney and the Department of Justice.

On 10/10/75, Mr. CAHILL was so advised and it was pointed out to him that the individuals who might be of assistance to him at the department, should any other problems be resolved relative to this matter. Mr. CAHILL was again thanked for his thoughtfulness relative to the security of sensitive Bureau sources.

It was noted that in the conversation with Supervisor LEE at the Bureau, he was informed as requested by SAC ROBERT C. DENZ, of the fact that a request had been made of the Freedom of Information Act section directly to the Freedom of Information Act Representative, JOHN H. HAWKES, relative to the location of JEROME EUGENE TARTAKOW relative to the JULIUS ROSENBERG matter. Mr. LEE advised that he had discussions on 10/10/75, with the Freedom of Information Act supervisors relative to this matter and that a coordination had been established at FBIHQ to preclude the possibility of duplication of effort and also to keep the proper authorities in the various offices apprised of the decisions made at FBIHQ, relative to sensitive sources. Mr. LEE stated he appreciated the position taken by Mr. DENZ relative to the possibly duplication of effort and he indicated that this matter would be precluded from occurring in the future, due to the coordination that had been established at FBIHQ.

Rosenberg File Search Too Taxing?

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Dept. has asked a federal court for permission to end its search for FBI records pertaining to the Rosenberg espionage case.

The department filed the motion in a lawsuit brought by Michael and Robert Meeropol, sons of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg who were executed in 1953 after being convicted of slipping atomic bomb secrets to Soviet agents.

Earlier this year, U. S. District Court ordered the department to provide several thousand pages from the FBI files on the case by Nov. 15 to the Meeropols, who use the name of their adoptive parents.

More than 700 pages from the files and a 3000-page index of additional material have been given to the Meeropols.

Extensive Search

Department lawyers told the court the FBI has searched its files extensively and should not be required to conduct any further searching for other material which might be related to the case only peripherally.

The Meeropols asked for material on about 100 persons whose names were on a government witness list in the case.

In an affidavit submitted with the department motion, FBI agent Thomas H. Brisson said it would "require considerable independent research" to establish the identity of many of those on the list.

In many cases it "would still be impossible to determine positively if the information in the FBI files in fact pertains to the person on the list, in view of the lack of sufficient identifying data available," the affidavit said.

The department argued that the search conducted so far more than satisfies the requirements of the Freedom of Information Act, under which the Meeropols brought their suit.

Department lawyers said the FBI has assigned 13 full-time and 21 part-time employees to the Meeropols' request.

The below listed reports are located in the second drawer from the top in the steel cabinet numbered Department of Justice 51128. The top drawer of this cabinet contains motions relative to the ROSENBERG case number 114868. There are some FBI reports interspersed with the legal papers but these have been used to substantiate the government's case in various appeals and it is not felt that they can be separated without the direction of the USA.

Drawer number 3 contains nine books of Grand Jury minutes in black bound folders as well as a looseleaf volume in green indicating a chronological and alphabetical order of the witnesses who appeared at the Grand Jury. This drawer also contains a looseleaf folder indicating on the outside a digest of the testimony of the JULIUS ROSENBERG case. This has been broken down into approximately 160 pages of a recording of both direct examination and cross-examination of the witnesses who appeared at the trial.

The fourth drawer contains one brown manila envelope with cancelled checks which were issued to MORTON SOBELL from Reeves Instrument Company. Otherwise, the drawer is empty.

The fifth drawer of this cabinet contains 15 bound black books relative to Grand Jury testimony from 1949 through 1953.

Cabinet number 51129 contains, the first drawer being the top drawer, legal papers relative to the ROSENBERG case and a blue bound looseleaf notebook containing a digest of the testimony of the JULIUS ROSENEERG case.

The second drawer contains legal documents as well as the various exhibits still remaining in the USA's Office relative to the trial itself.

Drawer number 3 contains folders A through O broken down into various witnesses' statements as well as testimony of witnesses who appeared at the trial as well as documents which were used for their cross-examination. For example, personnel file of Navy Department of MAX ELITCHER.

Drawer 4 contains the same type of breakdown starting at P and ending at W. The latter portion of the drawer contains Grand Jury minutes. This drawer also contains a Chevron map of the City of Albuquerque.

Drawer 5 contains various legal papers of the USA's Office including charge outs relative to the various appeals in this particular trial. However, the majority of this material is legal papers of the USA's Office, SDNY, relative to the trial and the appeals.

On 2/21/51, a letter to the Honorable IRVING A. SAYPOL, USA, was directed from SAC EDWARD SCHEIDT. This letter states as follows:

Honorable Paul J. Curran
United States Attorney
Southern District of New York
United States Court House
Foley Square
New York, New York 10007

Attention: Thomas J. Cahill
Chief Assistant United States Attorney

Dear Sir:

Enclosed herewith is an inventory made by Special Agent ~~_____~~ of the New York Office of material located in the vault of cabinets maintained by the Southern District of New York (SDNY) located in the safe in your building. These cabinets that were reviewed are numbered 51128 and 51129.

This list contains only those materials that were reviewed and maintained by your office in relation to the Rosenberg proceedings. No other material was examined as you have indicated previously that to your knowledge this material was all inclusive of the material pertaining to the Rosenberg legal proceedings.

No attempt was made to review Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) material which was already part of the legal papers or were used as exhibits, etc. for appeals in relation to this matter. Any FBI material such as reports were not inventoried as they are apparently connected with the legal proceedings conducted by your office.

Sincerely,

J. WALLACE LA PRADE
Assistant Director in Charge

Re NY airtel 7/30/75 and Bureau telephone calls to NY 9/25 and 9/26/75.

Referenced telephone calls with Supv. THOMAS J. BRESSON were relative to the material that was examined by SA [REDACTED] of the NYO on 7/29/75 and inventory made.

Enclosed herewith is a list giving an inventory of the material without indicating the classification which the material did or did not have at that particular time.

On this date a telephonic conversation was had with Chief Assistant USA, SDNY THOMAS J. CAHILL who indicated that he thought that both the Bureau and the Department's response to the subpoena would be more properly covered in accordance with the decisions made by both the Department of Justice and the Bureau relative to this inventory.

Rosenberg File To Be Opened

Washington, Oct. 30 (UPI) — The Justice Department made plans today to make public almost all of its files on Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, who were convicted of espionage and executed in 1953.

The action was taken in response to a suit filed under the Freedom of Information Act by Robert and Michael Meeropol, the Rosenbergs' sons, who assumed the name of their adoptive parents.

In a report to the U.S. District Court in Washington, the Justice Department said it was providing more than the act required, but was withholding some documents clearly exempted by the act.

The chief purpose of the court report was to disford withholding grand jury testimony, whose secrecy is protected by law, and other information exempted by the act to protect the privacy of individuals, including informants.

TO : SAC (65-15348)

DATE: FEB 5 1976

FROM : SA [REDACTED] (#38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS AND ETHEL ROSENBERG
ESPIONAGE-R

On 1/27/76, in the course of other inquiries, AUSA WILLIAM KELLEHER advised that after the publicity relative to the availability of documents by the ROSENBERG children, the United States Attorney and Mr. KELLEHER made it be known to the press that the documents that the ROSENBERG children had indicated were not available, were definitely available and the only reason that these people had the documents were that they did not come to the United States Attorney's Office and review the documents that were declassified and released.

According to Mr. KELLEHER, this was made known to the press specifically to the "New York Times" and as such caused the ROSENBERG children's attorney, MARSHALL PERLIN to become quite disturbed, in that according to KELLEHER, he appeared at the United States Attorney's Office after the release of the position of the United States Attorney's Office by the criticism of the ROSENBERG children in the "New York Times".

Mr. KELLEHER advised that since that time, arrangements have been made with the United States Attorney THOMAS J. CAHILL to allow an individual representing MARSHALL PERLIN and the ROSENBERG children to review the documents in their entirety. Mr. CAHILL again pointed out to Mr. PERLIN, according to Mr. KELLEHER, that these documents were available and that the United States Government in the Southern District of New York did not look too kindly on PERLIN's allowance of his clients to criticize when they had not supplied an individual to review the documents that according to CAHILL, PERLIN knew were available.

Mr. KELLEHER stated that the individual who is reviewing the material for PERLIN and the ROSENBERG children is a young woman, who according to KELLEHER, is a law student by the name of BONNIE BROWER.

Mr. KELLEHER stated that he knew nothing concerning BROWER, other than she appeared to be a young law student and has had no conversation with her.

This information is being recorded for this file in view of past events occurring with charges made against the Government by the ROSENBERG children.

Memorandum

TO : S.C (65-15348)

DATE: JUN 17 1976

FROM : S. [REDACTED] (#38)

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG
ESP-R

On 6/3/76, Supv. JAMES P. LEE of the Bureau telephonically contacted the writer regarding captioned case.

He made reference to an article which appeared in the 6/2/76 New York Times. This article quoted a memo written by former Asst. Director WILLIAM SULLIVAN, 10/16/65, stating that the Bureau had succeeded in keeping MIRIAM and WALTER SCHNEIR off of several TV programs, where they had intended to discuss the book they had written about the ROSENBERG case.

The article also mentioned a memo of former Asst. Director CATHA De LOACH, dated 10/18/65, stated that Federal Judge IRVING KAUFMAN had been furnished public source information by the Bureau concerning this matter.

LEE advised that an Asst. Attorney General at the Department wanted to be advised as to who had contacted Judge KAUFMAN, and what information he had been furnished.

LEE requested that ROSENBERG and related files be reviewed for any information in regard to the above, during the period of late 1965 or early 1966.

The writer reviewed pertinent sections of the ROSENBERG, SOBELL, and SCHNEIR files, following which Supv. LEE was advised as follows:

- 1- 100-37158 (SOBELL)
- 1- 100-135206 (W. SCHNEIR)
- 1- 100-135207 (M. SCHNEIR)

The files reflect that periodically Judge KAUFMAN would forward to the NYO for information copies of newspaper or magazine articles, or personal letters which he had received which were critical of his handling of the ROSENBERG case. The files also reflect that periodically Judge KAUFMAN would telephonically contact former ADIC JOHN F. MALONE. Most of these calls appeared to indicate an instance in which Judge KAUFMAN felt that his personal safety was being threatened, a speaking engagement where there was some announced demonstration by a pro-ROSENBERG group.

LEE was advised that the files reviewed failed to reflect any action taken by the NYO against the SCHNEIRS regarding any TV appearance. The files also fail to reflect that any information was ever furnished to Judge KAUFMAN by the NYO.

LEE was advised that the reference at the end of the NY Times article to a letter sent by the Bureau to all offices apparently refers to SAC letter 65-60, dated 11/2/65, regarding the SCHNEIR book. Copies of this are contained in the NYO files.

Civil Action No.

EDWARD H. LEVI, Et Al,

Affidavit of Special Agent LEWIS D. SCHILIRO

I, LEWIS D. SCHILIRO, being duly sworn, depose

as follows:

(1) I am a Special Agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, assigned to the New York, New York Field Office of the FBI.

(2) I have read and am familiar with the contents of a teletype dated July 30, 1976, from FBI Headquarters (FBIHQ) to all FBI Field Offices, captioned "MICHAEL MEEROPOL, Et Al, V. EDWARD H. LEVI, Et Al., Civil Action Number 75-1121". This teletype instructed that a search be conducted of all FBI Field Offices to determine which of these offices possess files, of any type, pertaining to the twelve "Principals" in the ROSENBERG espionage case, and also to determine which of these offices possess files pertaining to approximately one hundred additional individuals, as these files relate to the investigation and trial of ETHEL and JULIUS ROSENBERG. The teletype set forth specific guidelines and instructions concerning the method of search to be conducted.

(3) I personally supervised the search conducted in the New York Field Office pursuant to the above-mentioned teletype, and this search was conducted exactly in conformance with the instructions contained therein. The information set forth herein is based on my personal knowledge, obtained in my official capacity.

(4) Attached hereto as Exhibit A, and incorporated by reference herein, is a list of those names enumerated in the teletype concerning whom it has been determined the New York Field Office possesses no files within the meaning of the instructions contained in the teletype.

(5) Attached hereto as Exhibit B, and incorporated by reference herein, is a list of those names enumerated in the teletype concerning whom it has been determined the New York Field Office may possess files within the meaning of the instructions contained in the teletype. Because of the lack of complete identifying data concerning many of the names, it is not possible to determine at this time whether the subject of the "main" file and/or "see" reference in the New York Field Office is identical to the individual whose name is contained in the teletype.

(6) Attached hereto as Exhibit C, and incorporated by reference herein, is a list of those names enumerated in the teletype concerning whom it has been determined the New York Field Office does possess files within the meaning of the instructions contained in the teletype.

(7) Exhibits B and C contain, immediately adjacent to each name listed therein, the total number of "main" file volumes located, if any, and also, the total number of "see" references located, if any.

(8) Inasmuch as the results reported herein are based only on a manual search of the indices of the field office, and not (except for the limited purpose of ascertaining the number of "main" file volumes or whether an individual who is the subject of a file is identifiable with the name in the teletype) an actual page-by-page search of the files of the New York Field Office, the possibility exists that records referred to in the indices of the New York Field Office have been routinely disposed of pursuant to past instructions issued by FBIHQ under the authority of regulations issued by the National Archives Records Service (NARS). No determination concerning this possibility could be made, however, without a manual search of the files themselves. Also, it would not be possible to determine, without a search of the files themselves, whether a "see" reference concerning an individual would consist of a single mention of that individual, or an entire file volume concerning that individual. Thus, a realistic estimate of the total number of pages of "see" references cannot be given at this time.

An Open letter to Judge Irving R. Kaufman

N.Y. Times
p. 18-E

DEAR JUDGE KAUFMAN:

The F.B.I. documents reprinted here were obtained by Michael and Robert Meeropol—sons of Ethel and Julius Rosenberg—as a result of a lawsuit brought under the Freedom of Information Act. They are just a few of the files obtained that involve your actions during and after the trial of the Rosenbergs and Morton Sobell.

These documents indicate that during the trial you abandoned your role as judge and impartial arbiter and, unknown to the defense and public, communicated with the prosecution regarding the sentences of the Rosenbergs and Sobell and in sustaining and justifying the conviction. They reveal that you communicated with the prosecution to vacate the stay of execution. They reflect your improper communication during the appellate process at the time your judicial rulings were being scrutinized. They disclose that under cover of your judicial office, you actively sought to use the FBI and friends in influential positions to investigate and suppress those people who raised critical questions about the trial and those advocating a re-airing of the case.

These documents show that you have violated the U.S. Constitution and your oath of office. They raise the most serious questions of judicial misconduct and might well be a basis for impeachment.

After reading thirty of these FBI documents, more than 100 professors of law concluded, in a letter to the House and Senate Judiciary Committee in September, 1976, that the documents, if true, "reveal a shocking pattern of ex parte contacts with the U.S. Attorney, F.B.I. officials and others in the Department of Justice from the time the original trial of the Rosenbergs and Sobell was pending before him in March, 1951 . . . a judge obsessed with protecting the verdict, judgment and sentence entered in the trial over which he presided and with stifling criticism of that trial—and driven by his obsession to conduct which would not be acceptable from a prosecuting attorney, much less from a judicial officer."

The documents establish that the defendants were deprived of the rudiments of a fair trial and due process. Had these files been available to the defense before the execution of the Rosenbergs, they could have served as the basis for setting aside the conviction and sentences. The Rosenbergs might well be alive today.

In June, 1976, copies of the documents were delivered to you by attorneys for the Meeropols, who requested that you deny or correct the information contained in them. You were also asked to disclose your own files regarding the case. You have ignored these requests.

History, justice and the integrity of our judicial system demand that you answer the following charges and questions they raise:

Documents #1 and #9 concern events that took place at the time you imposed the death sentence for the Rosenbergs. The documents indicate that prior to sentencing you had, unknown to the defense and public, conferred with prosecutor Irving Saypol and his assistant, Roy Cohn, and had obtained the views of the Department of Justice. You then directed Saypol to withhold this information in open court, and falsely stated at sentencing: "Because of the seriousness of this case and the lack of precedence [sic] I have refrained from asking the government for a recommendation. The responsibility is so great that I believe the court alone should assume this responsibility." (Trial Record, p. 1612)

Document #2 concerns a stay of execution granted by the Court of Appeals, after you denied one, so that the Rosenbergs could apply for a hearing before the Supreme Court. The memo reveals that you then suggested to the FBI, and urged the prosecution, to push vigorously to vacate that stay of execution and to prevent the issue of the legality of the execution being held over until the Fall of 1953, thus making possible an earlier execution date.

Such conduct and ex parte communication constituted judicial impropriety and impeded the due administration of justice.

On June 17, 1953, according to document #3, while Justice Douglas was considering a new stay of execution for the Rosenbergs, you very confidentially informed the FBI that on the night before, a secret meeting had been held between Chief Justice Vinson and Attorney General Brownell, at which time Justice Vinson stated he would recall the full Supreme Court from its recess in order to vacate any stay of execution that a Justice might grant.

This document further discloses that you were in ex parte communication with the prosecution and learned of the ex parte meeting between the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Attorney General to foreclose further review by the Supreme Court, thus allowing the execution to proceed.

Document #4 concerns Morton Sobell's motion for an evidentiary hearing and a new trial in 1956. This document discloses that when you received this motion, and prior to the time of argument, unknown to the defense, you spoke with former Rosenberg prosecutor James Kilseheimer and decided in advance that you would deny the motion without an evidentiary hearing (which you ultimately did after you heard oral argument on the motion.)

Your actions constituted a denial of due process and belies the claim you made of judicial impartiality. Were you not required to disqualify yourself from consideration of the motion?

Document #5 concerns an appeal brought by Morton Sobell before the U.S. Court of Appeals. The memo states that after oral argument was held, you "raised hell" with Judge Thurgood Marshall (now a Supreme Court Justice) when it appeared that Marshall might rule favorably on Sobell's appeal.

Did you, as the memo reflects, ask the FBI to inform the Attorney General about Judge Marshall's reaction because you were concerned, that "this might very well be the straw that breaks the camel's back and as a result obtain Sobell's freedom."

Documents #6, 7 and 8 chronicle your role in the FBI campaign to stifle and suppress any critical inquiry into the Rosenberg-Sobell case. The files reveal that you were supplied with FBI data about the writers and producers of a play that criticized the trial. They disclose that you arranged for a letter to be written to the New York Times to criticize the Times' favorable review of the drama and that you took "steps" to help the FBI "refute" Invitation to An Inquest, a book critical of the trial, while the FBI arranged for the authors to be denied access to the media.

By what right of judicial office did you use the FBI and other sources to attempt to suppress public inquiry regarding the Rosenberg-Sobell case?

Document #10 speaks for itself. The memo reveals that in May, 1975, you called the New York office of the FBI and asked them to engage in "counter action to combat the attention" received by the activities of the National Committee to Reopen the Rosenberg case.

There are more documents. Even more questions are raised by them. That you sit as Chief Judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit makes it even more compelling that the facts be known. You cannot remain silent. You must open your files.

ESPIONAGE - R

Superior New Barloga of the New York Office furnished the following information:

According to New York, Assistant United States Attorney, Southern District of New York, Judge Irving Kaufman, who presided at the Rosenberg trial on April 2, 1951, consulted with Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Jerome Frank concerning the law which he would apply on the defendants. At that time Judge Jerome Frank indicated that he was against the death penalty for any of the defendants, but recommended that Judge Kaufman contact Judge Wendell of the District Court. Representative Wendell indicated that he was in favor of the death penalty for Julius Rosenberg, Morton Sobell, and Ethel Rosenberg.

Assistant United States Attorney Cohn related that Judge Kaufman personally favored sentencing Julius and Ethel Rosenberg to death and that he would give a prison term to Morton Sobell.

Assistant United States Attorney Cohn reportedly indicated to Judge Kaufman that he thought the death penalty for the Rosenbergs and Morton Sobell was in order, but at the same time he was of the opinion that if Mrs. Rosenberg were sentenced to a prison term there was a possibility that she would talk and add some concessions could be had on the basis of her evidence. Cohn also indicated to Kaufman that he feared sentencing Greenleaf to fifteen years imprisonment, Kaufman replied that it was his intention to add five years to any sentence which was recommended by the Government concerning Greenleaf.

Barloga further stated that an Agent was present when Assistant United States Attorney Cohn conferred telephonically with U.S. Attorney Irving Saypol, and during this conversation it was indicated that Saypol was coming to Washington, D. C. to confer on April 6th with the Attorney General concerning the sentencing of the defendants. During this conversation Cohn expressed to Saypol that while in Washington Saypol might also agree to confer with the Director concerning his recommendations.

TO: THE DIRECTOR

SUBJECT: JULIUS & ETHEL ROSENBERG
(Feasibility of delay till Fall of 1952)

At 7:20 p.m., SAC Boardman called from New York to advise that Judge Kaufman had called him later and stated he had come to the conclusion that it would not be necessary for New York detectives to continue to protect him and that the uniformed cadets in front of his apartment building would be sufficient. This was the arrangement prior to the time the two decisions were assigned to Judge Kaufman. Judge Kaufman asked Boardman's opinion, but Boardman did not give any, indicating that it was a matter for the Judge to decide. At the Judge's request, Boardman did call Commissioner Mangham and gave along the Judge's request.

Judge Kaufman then discussed with Boardman the Circuit Court decision that the Rosenbergs could apply for a writ of certiorari. He pointed out that they have until March 25th to make an application, that the Supreme Court usually takes two weeks in April and even if the Supreme Court considers the matter in April and denies the writ, the defense has 25 days for re-argument and will probably wait the full 25 days. The Supreme Court recesses in June and might not reach the case before it returns. Consequently, unless the matter is pushed vigorously by the government, the whole case may have more or less fall. Judge Kaufman was of the opinion that the Department should push the matter vigorously to get it before the Supreme Court.

SAC Boardman expressed no opinion on this at all to the Judge, but pointed out that the U.S. Attorney would be the proper person to initiate action and take it up with the Department. Shortly thereafter, Assistant U.S. Attorney Kaufman called Boardman and said he had talked with the Judge and had done two things—(1) he had sent a strong letter to the Department, requesting that the Department take steps to have the Circuit Court ruling vacated or, in the alternate, ask the Supreme Court to expedite the entire situation, and (2) he had called the Department telephonically and advised the Department of his views in the matter, pointing out strongly that it was not in the interest of the government to permit a delay in the matter.

Boardman said he felt that the FBI should stay out of this and consequently he gave no opinion either to the Judge or to Kilpatrick. I agree with Boardman that this is a matter which should be handled by the Department and he should not express an opinion. I told Boardman to keep us advised of developments.

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT
Office Memorandum
DATE: June 17, 1952

We checked with the Washington Field Office at 10:45 A.M. this morning on the status of the motion before Justice Douglas of the Supreme Court by Attorney Fyke Farmer. The Agent who was in the Court building advised that Justice Douglas and Justice Jackson went to their respective offices at 9:40 A.M. today and have not come out. The attorneys are standing by.

At 10:50 A.M. Supervisor Tom McAndrews of New York called to advise that Judge Kaufman had called the New York Office. Judge Kaufman said he learned from AUSA Kilsheimer that last night, on the recommendation of Justice Jackson, the Attorney General and Chief Justice Vinson met at 11:00 P.M. to determine whether to call the complete court into session to dispose of Fyke Farmer's motion. Judge Kaufman advised that as of 7:30 P.M., Douglas was disposed to grant the writ. However, after he came back from dinner, he was wavering and undecided. Judge Kaufman said that even if Douglas does throw out the motion, Justice Frankfurter will hear it. Judge Kaufman said that Justice Jackson was very upset about the indecision of Douglas. Jackson felt that the whole theory of listening to Farmer's motion was ridiculous and Douglas should have turned it down yesterday.

Supervisor Tom McAndrews, New York Office, informed me on the morning of May 16 that former Special Agent John Hartigan has advised him that he is talking with James Kilgus about the removal of Max Ladd. Kilgus has advised me of the position of the Sobell case and the reasons involved in the case. Hartigan was then a Bureau Agent and conducted a thorough investigation of the case.

According to Hartigan, Kilgus has indicated that he has written to the United States Attorney, a letter that the attorneys on the motion on Monday, May 15, should be kept strictly to the issues raised by the motion and that all other matters should be gone into by the Government in order to avoid the emergency involved in a hearing on the motion. Kilgus was advised to Hartigan that he has been in touch with Judge Kaufman and has pointed out to Judge Kaufman that all of the matters raised in the motion have been previously raised in one form or another and have been "knocked down". Kaufman has indicated that if the motion comes before him, he will deny the motion without a hearing.

Kilgus has stated that he will move the final draft of the Government's papers and will probably be in court on Monday, May 22nd, when the motion is presented.

CASE APPEAL

Judge Irving Kaufman called from New York at 11:40 a.m. 12-24-62. He stated that captured individual had appeared before him for the 4th time in the Court of Appeals. The last hearing was approximately one week ago. The court, at that time comprised of Judges Thomas, Friendly and the new Judge, Thurgood Marshall (formerly Attorney for the NAACP).

Judge Kaufman made reference to the Supreme Court decision in the Greenwald case in 1951 where the court held it was improper for the government to question the defendant upon appearing before the Grand Jury. Judge Kaufman indicated that in the particular case Mrs. Ethel Rosenberg, when she was on appeal in 1951, was asked questions concerning her taking the Fifth Amendment before a Federal Grand Jury. Sobell's new appeal that was held approximately one week ago was based on the latter fact.

Judge Kaufman stated that the Greenwald decision is not good law and in his opinion certainly does not apply to this case. Judge Kaufman made further reference to the fact that Judge Charles "Winters" had a headline "U.S. Attorney Corroborates Connection of Sobell May Be Legal". He stated the case about as a result of Judge Kaufman's asking a question of Assistant U.S. Attorney [illegible] during the above mentioned hearing approximately one week ago. Marshall's question was, "If Sobell had been tried last spring (1951) and we had him before us today, would it be necessary for the Court to reverse the decision, particularly in view of the Greenwald decision?"

[illegible] replied probably, Judge Kaufman said that was typical of the answers given by inexperienced trial attorneys who handle such cases for the Department of Justice. He indicated he had raised "hell" with Thurgood Marshall's argument as he considered Marshall to be somewhat naive and certainly inexperienced in the matter. Judge Kaufman indicated that in his opinion the rapid move on the part of AUSA [illegible] would also be returned in "The Nation", "New Republic", and "The National Guardian".

Judge Kaufman was of the opinion that this might very well be the straw that breaks the camel's back and as a result ideas would be formed. He stated the Bureau might desire to request the Attorney General with the information situation.

As we know, before and after the execution of the above two subjects for espionage, the Communist Party in the country conducted a widespread propaganda campaign abroad from time to time, have commented upon the case. Some have shown sympathy for the Rosenbergs and have been critical of the Government's action. Just recently a book was written on the conviction by Walter D. and Marian Schware called "Invitation to Inquiry". This book has been reviewed by the Division and its contents are as follows:

On 10/15/65, [DELETED], a very good friend of the Bureau and [DELETED], was in the city. He had called me personally [DELETED] [DELETED] that he had an important matter to discuss. [DELETED] told me he had been [DELETED] in [DELETED], a leading television man in Chicago and [DELETED] [DELETED] explained that the [DELETED] had approached him to put on a television program relating to this book.

[DELETED] and it was evident from the conversation that a main purpose of the television program from their viewpoint would be not alone to persuade the American from all guilt in the field of espionage, but also to attack and undermine the FBI in its investigations. [DELETED] asked [DELETED] to put in a memorandum to me [DELETED] the past 6 or 7 years. I have been on [DELETED] television program 3 or 4 times and am rather well acquainted with him. [DELETED] told [DELETED] [DELETED] he would handle the matter in one or two weeks. From, he would be perfectly willing to put the Schware on television if the Bureau wanted to have me or two people in who could attack and expose them. Second, [DELETED] if this was not desirable he would refuse to have the Schware on his program. [DELETED] has always been cooperative in the past with regard to Bureau matters.

In view of this, I took the liberty of telling [DELETED] to [DELETED] [DELETED] to permit the Schware to go on his television program for no good would accrue from it. [DELETED] [DELETED] will handle this matter. It had to be expected, he knew [DELETED] wanted an answer right away.

[DELETED] also told [DELETED] that from talking to the Schware he got the impression that Schware is indeed of a bona fide effort [DELETED] FBI by putting these authors and their book on so many television stations as possible throughout the country.

As I see it, the first thing we should do in this matter is to take careful steps to secure the cooperation of friendly television stations and prevent this subversive effort from being successful. It should be kept off television programs and monitored and forced out of the public eye thereby. However, if this is successful and the authors are going on television around the country then it would be necessary for us to give immediate consideration to a wave of releases and exposing the book, and putting the authors in proper perspective.

RECOMMENDATION:
(1) That the Division start preparing an exhaustive brief relating this book to be held in readiness in the event that it is needed urgently.
(2) That an SAC letter be prepared alerting all field offices to the situation so that they can learn in advance of efforts to put the book and its authors on television programs and be prepared to take steps to prevent it.

ADDENDUM: CDD #10/16/65

Steps have already been taken in New York and the nation "contact" of news to relate the book written by the Schware. Judge Irving Kaufman has been furnished certain public source information and a hearing is being held in the future of the New York Times. [DELETED], a creditable columnist, is also doing this. A number of Catholic publications will also soon in this matter. In view of this, I think Mr. Sullivan's recommendation is good and that we should proceed accordingly.

SUBJECT: JULIUS ROSENBERG;
ESPIONAGE - R

Memorandum recommends letters be forwarded to the Attorney General and to Judge Kaufman concerning a play entitled "The United States vs. Julius and Ethel Rosenberg," currently showing in Cleveland, Ohio, which is critical of the Government's handling of that case.

On April 29, 1965, Judge Irving Kaufman, Circuit Court of Appeals, Second Circuit, telephonically contacted the Director concerning the above mentioned play. Judge Kaufman was alarmed that the "New York Times" reviewed this play the week of May 1 on April 29 and 30, 1965, which was highly unusual. Judge Kaufman indicated that he understood the play is critical of the Director, the prosecutor, and Judge Kaufman who was the trial judge in the Rosenberg case. The Director added that he felt the Attorney General should be informed, and the Director advised that he would let the Attorney General know.

This play opened in Cleveland on March 14, 1965, and is scheduled to continue until May 11, 1965. It was an observed by an Agent of the Cleveland Office and he noted it was not the influence of the Rosenberg case, and so was not the reverse, it is propaganda rather than drama. The author is Donald Martin [DELETED] [DELETED].

The play is directed by Larry Tetzels, a graduate of the University of Wichita, employed as a play director in the Cleveland area for the past five years. He is a very capable dramatic information on Tetzels or any of the actors or actresses in Cleveland, New York, or Bureau files.

IRVING M. SAYPOL
JUSTICE

Hon. Clarence M. Kelley
Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Washington, D.C. 20535

Dear Mr. Kelley:

My daughter, Barbara, now [DELETED] of Beverly Hills, California, an alumna of South College, [DELETED], has sent me the enclosed photograph of an article in the "South Alumnus Quarterly", February 1974 by Professor Alan Weinstein, entitled "Typing the FBI Files: An Interview Report." I direct your attention to the last paragraph which she enclosed with her comment "I thought you didn't ask for the death penalty. Is that true?"

I've enlightened her. Her question, as you can see, arose from Professor Weinstein's statement that FBI and Justice Department files have provided new insights... "That prosecutor in the Rosenberg case originally opposed mercy for the death penalty, but was overruled by Truman's demonstration of faith in Washington." I don't know the facts for the statement, nor do I know what records he speaks about. I do know the facts. The Professor is all wrong and he fabricates.

Preliminarily, when I had the honor of [REDACTED] Truman's appointment as United States Attorney—the prevailing insurance practice in criminal cases in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York began with the prosecutor's recommendation for punishment. This was contrary to the practice in the State Court where the judge took no recommendation. As chief [REDACTED] my predecessor, the late John F. X. [REDACTED] one of my own good responsibilities was to write recommendation. Up to succeeding him in 1968 I revised the subject with the late [REDACTED] John C. [REDACTED]. He requested that I continue the practice of recommending sentences.

In my six years in the office I recommended many such hundreds, and I can attest to my flagrant cases where judges modified my recommendations.

Now, to the point of the Professor's claim, I was never overruled by anybody. My son as Justice or not overruled me, but none overruled me as the matter of my recommendation of sentence.

I was the only prosecutor in the Rosenberg case. While some of my assistants assisted in preparation for trial and I let four of them examine some of the witnesses, I took the lead. All policy decisions were mine and mine alone. Advice I sought and took, but I repeat, final decision was always mine.

On the matter of the Rosenberg sentence, I had decided to make the recommendations which later were imposed. I made no recommendation at sentence at the direction of the sentencing judge, in these circumstances. The day before sentence he asked for my views. I gave three and he inquired regarding the views of the Department of Justice. I had not advised any. He asked me to seek them. I flew to Washington, met with the late Deputy Attorney General Peyton Ford and the late Associate Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division, James McInerney. They conveyed the views of your predecessor, J. Edgar Hoover. There were differences as all around among them, but capital punishment for one or both was in not out. I left to return to New York, called telephone to Peyton Ford that such far final word as possible resolution of these views I did not but the Washington situation remained at variance. It was at a public function that state that I phoned Mr. Ford in the presence of the judge who was attending the same event. Upon returning to him the Washington division I was then asked by the judge to refrain from making any recommendations for punishment the next day in the course of my closing statement at sentence.

There you have direct evidence of the facts in contradiction to Professor Weinstein's story.

You may see this in any way to keep the record straight.

Truly yours,
Irving M. Saypol

The list of subjects and individuals appearing on the Government's Witness List will therefore not be repeated in this communication.

For your information captioned FOIA suit has been in litigation for approximately two years. During the course of this litigation, on 8/1/75, the Court issued an Order that no documents maintained by the FBI be destroyed. Due to the file destruction moratorium then in effect, that Court Order was not brought to your attention in 1975. Due to the continuing litigation and current discussion regarding reinstitution of a file destruction program in the near future, you are hereby being advised of the Order of the Court in this matter. Accordingly, no files maintained in your office (origin or auxiliary office) relating to any of the main subjects or individuals appearing on the Government's Witness List should be destroyed. These files must
